“This anthology focuses on the contemporary social movements of sub-alterns seeking a space in a democratic system which has increasingly been geared to serve neoliberal economic agenda. The scholars critically examine to what extent social movements have been capable of deepening democracy in such a way as to enhance the political capacities of subaltern groups and thereby enable them to contest and challenge marginality, stigma, and exploitation. The various chapters provide rich and stimulating accounts of the struggles of the India’s poor and deprived communities for their rights and to carve out space in the system. The book will be valuable to all who are concerned with understanding nature and extent of deepening of democracy beyond formal elections.” (Ghanshyam Shah, Centre for Social Studies, Surat, India)

Rethinking International Development is dedicated to publishing cutting-edge titles that focus on the broad area of ‘development’. The core aims of the series are to present critical work that is cross disciplinary, challenges orthodoxies, reconciles theoretical depth with empirical research, explores the frontiers of development studies in terms of ‘development’ in both North and South and global inter-connectedness, and reflects on claims to knowledge and intervening in other people’s lives.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This volume is based on a seminar held over two days at the University of Bergen, Norway, in early 2015, as part of the research project on “Democratizing Indian Democracy? Social Movements and the State in Contemporary India”. The seminar would not have been possible without the generous support of the Norwegian Research Council. We would like to thank the participants for their presentations and contributions to the discussion, the spirit of which we hope to convey in the pages that follow. Special thanks are due to those authors who joined us later in the process, thereby enabling us to achieve a broader thematic and geographical coverage. We also thank Palgrave Macmillan for their interest in this project and for their continued support and encouragement along the way.
