Tony Malim has a first degree from Cambridge in classics and history and a Masters Degree in Education with specialization in psychology from Lancaster University. He has taught A level psychology virtually from its inception as a pilot project in 1972 and has been an assistant examiner in the subject. His present post is that of Head of the School of Social Sciences at Weston-super-Mare College of Further Education.

INTRODUCTION

This is the first in a series of short books providing comprehensive notes suitable for students of A level or first-year degree level Psychology. It includes discussion of relevant theory, up-to-date research evidence and practical applications of psychological knowledge. The books in this series can be used for private study or as supplementary material and exercises to accompany a taught course. Each chapter includes self-assessment questions and recommended further reading.

To obtain a sound grasp of developmental psychology, the reader is advised to work through the text a section at a time and to consider the self-assessment questions at the end of each section. The self-assessment questions might then be re-considered after further reading has been undertaken.
