List of Plates

1. The 'new' Conservatism confronts the embodiment of the old order: Churchill is Prince Hal to Salisbury's Falstaff (Punch)
2. Uneasy coexistence: Chamberlain looks to the future, Balfour looks resigned – painting by Sydney Prior Hall (National Portrait Gallery)
3. Smoke a big cigar and talk softly: Bonar Law with one of his main hobbies (Hulton Deutsch)
4. Always playing the game and losing it: Austen Chamberlain in characteristic pose – on the way out (Hulton Deutsch)
5. Constitutional Conservatives: Neville Chamberlain's corvine elegance contrasts with Baldwin's 'farmer Stan' tweeds (Hulton Deutsch)
6. The bull-dog with his second-in-command: Churchill and Eden in symbolically appropriate pose, photographed attending Lloyd George's memorial service (Associated Press)
7. Harold Macmillan in 1963, looking (as well he might) pensive (Camera Press/Alan Clifton)
8. The last toff at No. 10: Sir Alec Douglas-Home (Hulton Picture Company)
9. 'The good, the bad, the ugly and the other one' – but not in that order: l. to r., Lord Home, Mrs Thatcher, Lord Stockton and Edward Heath (Camera Press)
10. 'All for one – and every man for himself!': Mr Major's team photograph: l. to r. Kenneth Clarke, Mr M., Chris Patten, Michael (soon to be 'Prezza') Heseltine, Douglas Hurd and the soon-to-be forgotten Chancellor, Norman Lamont (Financial Times)

Acknowledgements

I am grateful to Professor Jeremy Black, now of Exeter University, who first asked me to write this book, as well as to my colleague, Professor Geoffrey Searle, who bore up well under what must have struck him as provocative arguments; his efforts improved the text greatly

I am also grateful to Alan Clark and Andrew Roberts for conversations which informed the ideas which went into the book – even if they will not agree with them.

I would also like to thank my students at the University of East Anglia for their unwitting contributions over the last sixteen years.

I am grateful to my wife, Lorraine, for putting up with my preoccupation with this book.
