

THE CHANGING EXPERIENCE OF EMPLOYMENT

Restructuring and Recession

Edited by

Kate Purcell, Stephen Wood,
Alan Waton and Sheila Allen

M

in association with

PALGRAVE MACMILLAN

© British Sociological Association 1986

All rights reserved, No reproduction, copy or transmission of this publication may be made without written permission.

No paragraph of this publication may be reproduced, copied or transmitted save with written permission or in accordance with the provisions of the Copyright Act 1956 (as amended).

Any person who does any unauthorised act in relation to this publication may be liable to criminal prosecution and civil claims for damages.

First published 1986

Published by
THE MACMILLAN PRESS LTD
Houndmills, Basingstoke, Hampshire RG21 2XS
and London
Companies and representatives
throughout the world

British Library Cataloguing in Publication Data
The Changing experience of employment: restructuring and recession.—(Explorations in sociology; 22)

1. Labour supply—Great Britain 2. Depressions

3. Great Britain—Economic conditions—1945–

I. Purcell, Kate II. British Sociological Association III. Series

331.12'5'0941 HD5765.A6

ISBN 978-0-333-39696-4 ISBN 978-1-349-18465-1 (eBook)

DOI 10.1007/978-1-349-18465-1

Contents

List of Tables and Figures	vi
Acknowledgements	vii
Notes on the Contributors	viii
1 Restructuring and Recession Kate Purcell and Stephen Wood	1
2 Contract Work in the Recession Ralph Fevre	18
3 Re-dividing Labour: Factory Politics and Work Reorganisation in the Current Industrial Transition Bryn Jones and Michael Rose	35
4 Recruitment as a Means of Control Michael Maguire	58
5 Female Workers in the First and Third Worlds: the 'Greening' of Women's Labour Ruth Pearson	75
6 Work, Home and the Restructuring of Jobs Harriet Bradley	95
7 Word Processing and the Secretarial Labour Process Juliet Webster	114
8 New Technology and the Service Class John Child	132
9 Rationalisation, Technical Change and Employee Reactions Wolfgang Littek	156
10 Women and Technology: Opportunity Is not Enough Cynthia Cockburn	173
11 Gender, Consent and Exploitation among Sheltered Housing Wardens Sheila Cunnison	188
Bibliography	206
Author Index	224
Subject Index	228

List of Tables

4.1	Age of sample by production of department	67
4.2	Length of service by production department	69
4.3	Job source	70
4.4	Number of sample with relatives in the plant	71

List of Figures

8.1	A typology of higher-level white collar employees	135
8.2	A representation of the influences on the extent to which information technology threatens the employment and work content of white-collar workers	149

Acknowledgements

Earlier drafts of the chapters in this and its companion volume The Experience of Unemployment (Allen et al, 1986), with the exception of the introductory chapters by the editors, were originally presented at the British Sociological Association's Annual Conference on 'Work, Employment and Unemployment' held at the University of Bradford in April 1984. The numbers who attended that event, the quantity and variety of papers given and the quality of debate, all testified to the importance with which social scientists treat these issues. The material in this book and its sister volume was selected to produce two thematic collections, representative of the conference and of ongoing sociological research on work, employment and unemployment. We regret that the constraint of thematic coherence forced us to exclude several excellent contributions. The editors would like to thank the contributing authors for the time and effort that they have spent on revising their papers for publication. Finally, we are grateful for the help, unfailing good humour and efficiency of Win Healey and Judith Hammond of Bradford University, who transformed successive, much-annotated drafts into elegant and accurate typescript.

Notes on the Contributors

Sheila Allen is Professor of Sociology at the University of Bradford. She has published extensively in the areas of ethnic relations, gender and work and is currently researching homeworking and social change in coal-mining areas.

Harriet Bradley worked as an English teacher before making a mid-career switch to sociology, and is currently lecturer at Sunderland Polytechnic. She has carried out research on the hosiery industry, and is also working on a book on the sexual division of labour in the workplace.

John Child is Professor of Organisational Behaviour at the University of Aston, and was Director of the Work Organisation Research Centre there from 1984 to 1985. His research interests are in the social aspects of new technology, work organisation, and cross-national studies.

Cynthia Cockburn has carried out research on local government and community action; on the impact of new technology on compositors in the newspaper industry; and on gender and technology in the context of technical change. She is currently a Senior Research Fellow in the Department of Social Science and Humanities at The City University, London, and is a member of the National Union of Journalists.

Sheila Cunnison has carried out participant and observational research in industrial, service and professional work situations, and into women's participation in trade unions. She is currently employed by Humberside College of Higher Education in research work about housing and care of the elderly.

Ralph Fevre is currently employed on the ESRC-funded 'Steel Project' at University College of Swansea and has recently published a book on racial discrimination in employment.

Bryn Jones has been a Research Fellow and then Lecturer in Sociology at the University of Bath since 1978. Research and publications have been concerned with the relationships between new technology, industrial relations and skills in British and American manufacturing industry. He has recently completed a cross-national study of divergent patterns of factory automation and work in Italy, Japan and the USA.

Wolfgang Littek is currently a Professor of Sociology of Work at the University of Bremen and was formerly Assistant Professor at the University of Munich. He has worked on theoretical concepts in West Germany 'industrial and plant sociology' and researched on white-collar workers in industry, with a special interest in the effects of new technologies and reorganisation on working and employment conditions, on employees' reactions, and also on international comparative perspectives.

Michael Maguire has carried out research on the relationship between social control and the labour process in the telecommunications industry. He was a part-time tutor of Queen's and Open University students and a Junior Research Fellow in the Institute of Irish Studies, Queen's University, Belfast. He is currently a Research Officer in the Social Technology and Policy Division of Aston University.

Ruth Pearson is a Visiting Research Fellow at the School of Development Studies, University of East Anglia and a part-time Tutor for the Open University Third World Studies Course. She has carried out research on women's employment and internationalisation of capital in Latin America and Europe and is currently working on a research project on the impact of service sector growth on local change in East Anglia co-ordinated by the Faculty of Social Science, Open University.

Kate Purcell has carried out research on manual workers' employment experiences and attitudes to work, with a particular interest in the sexual division of labour and the relationship between class and gender. She is currently a Research Fellow at the Institute for Employment Research at Warwick University.

Michael Rose is Reader in Socio-Cultural Change, University of Bath, where he is co-ordinating studies of the labour market in 'Sunrise City' for the ESRC research programme on social change and economic life. His most recent book is Reworking the Work Ethic (1985).

Alan Waton has been a Lecturer in Sociology at the University of Bradford since 1973. He is particularly interested in problems of analysing power in industrial societies, and is currently engaged in research on ethnic minority use of the media.

Juliet Webster is completing a Ph.D. thesis which examines changes in secretarial and typing labour processes associated with the move to word processing, with special emphasis on existing divisions of labour within the office. She is now employed as a research assistant at The City University's Social Statistics Research Unit.

Stephen Wood has lectured in Industrial Relations at the London School of Economics since 1974. He has written and edited several studies of work and unemployment, and is currently engaged in Anglo-American research on recent changes in the motor industry.