Acknowledgements

This book probably would not have been envisaged let alone written without the advice and encouragement of Stephan Feuchtwang and Stuart Thompson, my Ph.D. examiners and I would like to express my sincere gratitude to them. Elisabeth Croll, my long-suffering supervisor, is also thanked for her help over many years. Colleagues in Britain, China and more recently Bulgaria, have all played their parts in terms of advice, ideas and support for this project and I am deeply indebted to all of them.

Many thanks to Brian Boulton, formerly of Harrow College of Higher Education, for finding time for me to conduct my research in the first place and Morry van Ments at Loughborough University for his practical advice and support.

Friends and family are never forgotten. This is for them and especially my parents, John and Freda Cherrington.
