To my parents, with gratitude

Since I began writing for the public I have hardly written a page in which the word Europe does not appear with symbolic aggression. For me, all Spanish afflictions begin and end with this word.

José Ortega y Gasset, El Imparcial, 1909

I have dedicated five years of my life to writing this book. The first four were used to write my doctoral thesis, and the last one to convert this thesis into a book. During this period I have accumulated a considerable number of personal debts. I am indebted to Dr Charles T. Powell, who supervised me until he left Oxford, and continued following my research closely despite the hassle of Madrid academic life and Spanish politics. I would also like to thank him for a long period of friendship, which goes back to 1988, when I arrived at University College, Oxford as an undergraduate. The other major personal debt is to Mr Anthony J. Nicholls, who supervised me for the last year and took the patience to read several drafts of my thesis until he considered it had reached an acceptable level. I would also like to thank Dr Fernando Guirao for a very critical but constructive eight-hour conversation about my thesis.

I owe the privilege of publishing with St Antony's Macmillan series to two people: Dr Eugene Rogan, the general editor of the series, who welcomed the manuscript, and Dr Herminio Martins who wrote a favourable report with very useful suggestions for improving the final version of the book.

As far as financial matters are concerned I would like to express my gratitude to the Fundación Marcelino Botín, which awarded me a four-year scholarship to subsidize the expenses for my research.

Last but not least, I am indebted to a very considerable number of friends and colleagues, both at Oxford and Madrid who provided me with academic advice, moral support or simply contributed to many of the happy moments which this period of my life has offered. Although mentioning them all would take too much space, each one knows the place he/she deserves in this thesis.
