ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

This monograph began a number of years ago as a PhD project at the University of Münster (Germany). There are many people to whom I owe much gratitude for their contributions to its successful completion, who freely offered support, feedback, time, and encouragement over the years, and I would like to thank them wholeheartedly. I thank first of all my PhD advisor Katja Sarkowsky, for her sincere commitment to my project, her steady support through its different stages, and her valuable advice and insightful feedback at all critical junctures. I am grateful to my second advisor, Rai Peterson from Ball State University, for her keen support and encouragement, as well as to my colleagues in Augsburg, Münster, and Frankfurt, not to forget those I met through the Postgraduate Forum of the German Association of American Studies. They have generously read and discussed with me various chapters of this project, and many have become friends as much as colleagues. I would like to mention particularly Ela Baraniecka, Ina Batzke, Danyela Demir, Eric Erbacher, Diana Gollnest, Caroline Kögler, Corinna Lenhardt, Nicole Lindenberg, Astrid Magiera, Anna Rapp, Jesper Reddig, Judith Rauscher, Senta Sanders, Nele Sawallisch, Anna Thiemann, and Chris Wahlig, whose support and enthusiasm over the years have played an enormous role in keeping me going. I am grateful to Susanne Opfermann, who introduced me to aging studies, to Thom Fitzgerald, who provided me with access to his film Cloudburst when it had not yet arrived in Germany, and to my colleagues from Graz, Ulla Kribernegg and Roberta Maierhofer, who generously shared their knowledge in the field of aging studies early on in my project. I am thankful for Mabel Keßler's help in preparing the index, the encouraging and helpful suggestions of the anonymous readers, and the support from the excellent editorial team at Palgrave Macmillan. My special thanks go to Jasper Kunstreich, Clara Seipel, and my family (Hess and Hilgenstock) who have accompanied me in all my endeavors from the beginning. And last, but certainly not least, I thank Mark Brown for sticking with me and my project all this time, and for never ceasing to offer his time, his patience, and his love.

Parts of Chap. 8, “New Stories About Gay Aging: Mike Mills’s Beginners (2010)” have previously been published as “Portrait of the Father as a Gay Man: A New Story About Gay Aging in Mike Mills’s Beginners” in the Journal of the Midwestern Modern Language Association and are republished here with permission.
