

Palgrave Studies in Literature, Science and Medicine

Series Editors

Sharon Ruston

Department of English and Creative Writing

Lancaster University

Lancaster, UK

Alice Jenkins

School of Critical Studies

University of Glasgow

Glasgow, UK

Catherine Belling

Feinberg School of Medicine

Northwestern University

Chicago, IL, USA

Palgrave Studies in Literature, Science and Medicine is an exciting new series that focuses on one of the most vibrant and interdisciplinary areas in literary studies: the intersection of literature, science and medicine. Comprised of academic monographs, essay collections, and Palgrave Pivot books, the series will emphasize a historical approach to its subjects, in conjunction with a range of other theoretical approaches. The series will cover all aspects of this rich and varied field and is open to new and emerging topics as well as established ones.

Editorial Board

Steven Connor, Professor of English, University of Cambridge, UK

Lisa Diedrich, Associate Professor in Women's and Gender Studies, Stony Brook University, USA

Kate Hayles, Professor of English, Duke University, USA

Peter Middleton, Professor of English, University of Southampton, UK

Sally Shuttleworth, Professorial Fellow in English, St Anne's College, University of Oxford, UK

Susan Squier, Professor of Women's Studies and English, Pennsylvania State University, USA

Martin Willis, Professor of English, University of Westminster, UK

More information about this series at

<http://www.palgrave.com/gp/series/14613>

Darryl Chalk · Mary Floyd-Wilson
Editors

Contagion and the Shakespearean Stage

palgrave
macmillan

Editors

Darryl Chalk
University of Southern Queensland
Toowoomba, QLD, Australia

Mary Floyd-Wilson
University of North Carolina
at Chapel Hill
Chapel Hill, NC, USA

Palgrave Studies in Literature, Science and Medicine

ISBN 978-3-030-14427-2

ISBN 978-3-030-14428-9

(eBook)

<https://doi.org/10.1007/978-3-030-14428-9>

Library of Congress Control Number: 2019935507

© The Editor(s) (if applicable) and The Author(s) 2019

This work is subject to copyright. All rights are solely and exclusively licensed by the Publisher, whether the whole or part of the material is concerned, specifically the rights of translation, reprinting, reuse of illustrations, recitation, broadcasting, reproduction on microfilms or in any other physical way, and transmission or information storage and retrieval, electronic adaptation, computer software, or by similar or dissimilar methodology now known or hereafter developed.

The use of general descriptive names, registered names, trademarks, service marks, etc. in this publication does not imply, even in the absence of a specific statement, that such names are exempt from the relevant protective laws and regulations and therefore free for general use. The publisher, the authors and the editors are safe to assume that the advice and information in this book are believed to be true and accurate at the date of publication. Neither the publisher nor the authors or the editors give a warranty, expressed or implied, with respect to the material contained herein or for any errors or omissions that may have been made. The publisher remains neutral with regard to jurisdictional claims in published maps and institutional affiliations.

Cover credit: INTERFOTO/Alamy Stock Photo

This Palgrave Macmillan imprint is published by the registered company Springer Nature Switzerland AG

The registered company address is: Gewerbestrasse 11, 6330 Cham, Switzerland

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This book started as a seminar, “Shakespeare and Contagion,” at the 2015 Shakespeare Association of America meeting in Vancouver. We owe a sincere debt of gratitude to all of the participants in that session, many of whom are represented in this volume, for helping to make it such a lively, searching, and fun conversation. We were very fortunate that Rebecca Totaro joined us as an auditor: Her fine work on the plague has been a constant source of inspiration. We would also like to thank our editorial team at Palgrave, especially Ben Doyle and Camille (Milly) Davies, for their belief in this project and continuous support and patience throughout the process.

And, personally, from Mary: My thinking on contagion has been inspired by several key events and conversations. I am grateful first to my co-editor Darryl Chalk who initiated our collaboration on this project. Despite our busy schedules and the long distance between us, we have worked together seamlessly. Darryl’s extensive knowledge and good humor ensured that this project has been both fun and productive. I owe thanks to my graduate students in the UNC seminar “English 829,” “Contagion and Early Modern Drama” who happily shared my enthusiasm for slimy pools and festering buboes. Some of the research for this volume took place while I held a fellowship at the National Humanities Center, where I benefitted from their unmatched support in library resources and the magical collegiality of the place. Thanks as always to my family, Lanis, Claude, and Maddie, who bless me daily with companionship, understanding, and infectious laughter.

From Darryl: I would firstly like to thank my co-editor Mary for agreeing to go on this journey with me. To work with Mary has been, in so many ways, such an honor. Mary's generosity, calmness, and wisdom throughout the process have made this collaboration a genuine pleasure. I am very grateful to Mark Harvey and the staff of USQ's Research and Innovation office for the funding and support over the last few years, especially in making the long and expensive trip to the SAA each year, which helped facilitate work on this volume. Particular thanks also to my USQ colleague Laurie Johnson for his friendship, exemplary collegiality, and for setting the benchmark on how to take Shakespeare scholarship to the next level at a small, regional university in Australia. Finally, my eternal love and thanks to my wife, Tonia, and our little boy, Oscar. Their unconditional love, infectious joy, and unending patience have kept me going even at the most arduous moments in the making of this volume.

CONTENTS

1	Introduction: Beyond the Plague	1
	Darryl Chalk and Mary Floyd-Wilson
 Part I Contagious Sensations
2	Comedy, the Senses, and Social Contagion in Plays Confuted in Five Actions and The Comedy of Errors	25
	Jennie Votava
3	“A Deal of Stinking Breath”: The Smell of Contagion in the Early Modern Playhouse	47
	Amy Kenny
4	“Go Touch His Life”: Contagious Malice and the Power of Touch in The Witch of Edmonton	63
	Bronwyn Johnston
5	Kisses and Contagion in Troilus and Cressida	83
	Jennifer Forsyth

Part II Spreading Abjection

- 6 “Search This Ulcer Soundly”: Sex as Contagion
in The Changeling and Othello 105
Emily Weissbourd
- 7 “Amend Thy Face”: Contagion and Disgust
in the Henriad 127
Ariane M. Balizet
- 8 Bad Dancing and Contagious Embarrassment
in More Dissemblers Besides Women 147
Jennifer Panek
- 9 Contagious Pity: Cultural Difference and the Language of Contagion in Titus Andronicus 169
Jennifer Feather

Part III Viral Ideas

- 10 The Hungry Meme and Political Contagion
in Coriolanus 191
Clifford Werier
- 11 Hamlet’s Story/Stories of Hamlet: Shakespeare’s
Theater, the Plague, and Contagious Storytelling 213
J. F. Bernard
- 12 “Nature Naturized”: Plague, Contagious Atheism, and The Alchemist 233
John Charles Estabillio
- 13 Embedded in Shakespeare’s “Fair Verona” 255
Rebecca Totaro

Afterword 277

Index 285

EDITORS AND CONTRIBUTORS

About the Editors

Darryl Chalk is Senior Lecturer in Theatre at the University of Southern Queensland and has served as Treasurer on the executive committee of the Australian and New Zealand Shakespeare Association since 2004. He is co-editor of Rapt in Secret Studies: Emerging Shakespeares (2010) with Laurie Johnson. He has published a series of articles and book chapters on contagion, emotion, and theatricality in Shakespearean drama. He is currently writing a book with the working title, Pathological Shakespeare: Contagion, Embodiment, and the Early Modern Scientific Imaginary.

Mary Floyd-Wilson is the Bowman and Gordon Gray Distinguished Term Professor at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. She is the author of English Ethnicity and Race in Early Modern Drama (2003) and Occult Knowledge, Science, and Gender on the Shakespearean Stage (2013). She has co-edited Environment and Embodiment in Early Modern England (2007) with Garrett A. Sullivan, Jr., and Reading the Early Modern Passions: A Cultural History of Emotion (2004) with Gail Kern Paster and Katherine Rowe. She is currently writing a book about the devil titled The Tempter or the Tempted: Demonic Causality on the Shakespearean Stage.

Contributors

Ariane M. Balizet is Associate Professor of English and Women and Gender Studies at Texas Christian University. She is the author of Blood and Home in Early Modern Drama: Domestic Identity on the Renaissance Stage (Routledge, 2014) and many essays on blood, breastfeeding, and domesticity in early modern drama and Shakespeare in popular culture. Her second book, entitled Shakespeare and Girls' Studies, is forthcoming from Routledge.

J. F. Bernard is Assistant Professor of English at Champlain College in Montreal, Canada, with particular interests in the philosophical, cultural, and scientific underpinnings of Renaissance drama. His monograph, Shakespearean Melancholy: Philosophy, Form and the Transformation of Comedy, was recently published with Edinburgh University Press (August 2018). His current research places notions of contagion, theatrical publicity, and narrative in critical dialogue, in an attempt to understand the social, cultural, and cognitive impact of stories produced and circulated by early modern drama. He was the project coordinator for the city of Montreal's commemoration of the 400th anniversary of Shakespeare's death in 2016.

John Charles Estabillio is associate editor at Early Modern London Theatres (<https://emlot.library.utoronto.ca/>), a project by the Records of Early English Drama (REED). He has lectured on Shakespeare and the literary tradition at the University of Toronto, and is currently working on a book-length project on atheism and material conceptions of the soul in the English Renaissance.

Jennifer Feather is Associate Professor and Director of Graduate Studies at the University of North Carolina Greensboro, Greensboro, USA. Dr. Feather's research focuses on issues of gender and violence in early modern literature. Her book Writing Combat and the Self in Early Modern English Literature: The Pen and the Sword (Palgrave, 2011) examines competing depictions of combat in sixteenth-century texts as varied as Arthurian romance and early modern medical texts. She has published articles in a range of venues on drama, medicine, and violence and co-edited a volume with Catherine E. Thomas, Violent Masculinities: Male Aggression in Early Modern Texts and Culture (Palgrave, 2013).

Jennifer Forsyth is Professor of English at Kutztown University of Pennsylvania, USA. She is an Associated Textual Editor for the Internet Shakespeare Editions, is the textual editor of Henry 6, Part 1 (Norton Shakespeare, 3rd edition), and authored “Cutting Words and Healing Wounds: Friendship and Violence in Early Modern Drama,” which appeared in Violent Masculinities (Palgrave, 2013). She has written numerous papers on the intersection of the physical and the emotional in early modern writing; editorial theory and practice; stylometric approaches to authorship attribution, especially in cases of collaboration; and conditions of early modern dramatic authorship and textual production.

Bronwyn Johnston lives in the UK and is currently on parental leave. She works on science, medicine, and magic in early modern English literature, especially drama. She studied at the University of Otago and the University of St Andrews, and received her doctorate from the University of Oxford in 2015. She has held research fellowships at the Centre for Reformation and Renaissance Studies at the University of Toronto and at Birkbeck, University of London.

Amy Kenny is Visiting Assistant Professor at University of California, Riverside, and co-editor of The Hare, a peer-reviewed, academic journal of untimely reviews. She has worked as Research Coordinator at Shakespeare’s Globe in London, where she was the chief dramaturg for 15 productions and conducted over 80 interviews with actors and directors as part of an archival resource for future scholarship. She has published on dramaturgy, the performance of laughter, and the senses. Her book with “Palgrave Studies in Literature, Science, and Medicine,” entitled Humoral Wombs on the Shakespearean Stage, was published in 2019.

Jennifer Panek is Associate Professor of English at the University of Ottawa. She is the author of Widows and Suitors in Early Modern English Comedy (Cambridge, 2004) and the editor of the Norton Critical Edition of The Roaring Girl. Her essays have appeared in ELR, ELH, Renaissance Drama, Journal for Early Modern Cultural Studies, Studies in English Literature 1500–1900, and elsewhere. She is currently working on a book about sexual shame in early modern drama.

Rebecca Totaro is Professor of English at Florida Gulf Coast University, where she specializes in Shakespeare and writing produced in response to the bubonic plague and other complex natural phenomena. Series editor for Cultural Inquiries in English Literature, 1400–1700, Penn State UP (formerly Medieval and Renaissance Literary Studies, Duquesne UP), Totaro is also recipient of the Monroe Kirk Spears Award from SEL Studies in English Literature 1500–1900 for “Securing Sleep in Hamlet” and author/editor of five books, including most recently Meteorology and Physiology in Early Modern Culture: Earthquakes, Human Identity, and Textual Representation (2017), as part of the series, Routledge Perspectives on the Non-human in Literature and Culture.

Jennie Votava is Assistant Professor of English at Allegheny College in the USA, where she specializes in early modern English literature and the health humanities. She received her medical training at Harvard Medical School and completed a residency in pediatrics at the University of Washington in Seattle. Her doctoral dissertation at New York University examined the four “lower” senses in early modern drama, and she is currently working on a project about gender and sensory contagion in Shakespeare’s plays.

Emily Weissbourd is an Assistant Professor of English at Lehigh University (USA). She holds a Ph.D. in Comparative Literature from the University of Pennsylvania. Her research focuses on representations of race and religion in early modern English and Spanish literature. She has published articles in journals including Modern Philology, Comparative Drama, and Huntington Library Quarterly and is the co-editor, with Barbara Fuchs, of Representing Imperial Rivalry in the Early Modern Mediterranean (University of Toronto Press, 2015). She is currently working on a book project titled Bad Blood: Race and the Place of Spain in Early Modern English Literature.

Clifford Werier is Professor of English at Mount Royal University in Calgary, Canada, where he has been teaching early modern literature since 1987. He is the editor of Shakespeare and Consciousness (Palgrave, 2016) and Much Ado About Nothing for the Internet Shakespeare Editions. His recent work focuses on the application of interface theory to Shakespearean media, especially questions of design and phenomenological engagement on page, stage, and screen. His writing on cognitive theory considers the application of Buddhist mindfulness categories to the Shakespearean present moment and on timing associated with the media-specific characteristics of Shakespearean jokes.