ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This book first took shape during six months of special study leave generously provided by the Faculty of Arts at the University of Adelaide. It was during this time that I was able to explore further my long-standing interest in the relationship between ethnic media and wider political and social theories.

I owe a great deal of gratitude to the many participants who have generously volunteered their time for my research over the years. In particular, members of the African-Australian community provided me with hours of interview data, as well as access to their media and cultural organisations.

Important feedback on several chapters was provided by Associate Professor Gil-Soo Han from Monash University and Doctor Robert Palmer from the University of Adelaide. I thank them both. I would also like to thank the external reviewers for their feedback on earlier drafts of the book. In particular, I owe thanks to Associate Professor Andrea Hickerson from Rochester Institute of Technology for her constructive and encouraging reviews of the manuscript.

Finally, I would like to thank my wife Rita and son Patrick for their patience and understanding throughout the writing of this book.
