

International Political Theory

Series Editor

The Palgrave International Political Theory Series provides students and scholars with cutting-edge scholarship that explores the ways in which we theorise the international. Political theory has by tradition implicitly accepted the bounds of the state, and this series of intellectually rigorous and innovative monographs and edited volumes takes the discipline forward, reflecting both the burgeoning of IR as a discipline and the concurrent internationalisation of traditional political theory issues and concepts. Offering a wide-ranging examination of how International Politics is to be interpreted, the titles in the series thus bridge the IR-political theory divide. The aim of the series is to explore international issues in analytic, historical and radical ways that complement and extend common forms of conceiving international relations such as realism, liberalism and constructivism.

For Francesca for her eternal tolerance, and Linda for always believing in me.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Firstly I would like to thank my supervisors for my PhD studies Jeremy Gilbert, Erica Cudworth, and Tim Hall for their support and encouragement throughout the project that became this book.

I extend my gratitude to the various friends and colleagues, without whose intellectual inspiration and companionship this thesis would not exist: Nick Srnicek, James Trafford, Helen Hester, Benedict Singleton, Reza Negarestani, Ray Brassier, and Mark and Zoe Fisher.

Special thanks should go to my friend and supervisor Jeremy Gilbert, for his immense generosity of spirit, ability to always get me back on track, his sympathetic assistance in helping shape the thesis in the direction it eventually went in, and for getting me to read Gramsci in the first place. His patience and unswerving support throughout the various administrative challenges that marked the progress of thesis were also of significant help.
