Palgrave Close Readings in Film and Television is an innovative new series of research monographs and collections of essays dedicated to extending the methods and subjects of detailed criticism. Volumes in the series – written from a variety of standpoints and dealing with diverse topics – are unified by attentiveness to the material decisions made by filmmakers and a commitment to develop analysis and reflection from this foundation. Each volume will be committed to the appreciation of new areas and topics in the field, but also to strengthening and developing the conceptual basis and the methodologies of critical analysis itself. The series is based in the belief that, while a scrupulous attention to the texture of film and television programmes requires the focus of concept and theory, the discoveries that such attention produces become vital in questioning and re-formulating theory and concept.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

I would first like to thank John Gibbs and Douglas Pye for inviting me to submit to the Close Readings series and for their invaluable help shepherding this project toward publication.

I would also like to thank everyone who has read bits and pieces of this book over the last six years, including Barbara Mennel, Marsha Bryant, Sylvie Blum-Reid, Anthony Coman, Chris Keathley, and Jimmy Newlin.

Special thanks to Robert Ray, whose classes at the University of Florida led me to study film in the first place, and whose friendship and guidance in the ensuing years have been integral to this project's completion.

Thanks to Lucy Fife Donaldson and James McDowell, whose feedback as guest editors of Movie: A Journal of Film Criticism no. 6 was important in the development of an early version of Chap. 5.

I am grateful for the help of Lina Aboujeb and Emily Wood at Palgrave Macmillan, whose editorial assistance has helped guide me through the publishing process.

Thanks as well to my former colleagues at the University of Florida and current colleagues at the University of Miami who have provided moral support along the way; to my parents, without whom none of this would have been possible; and to Barbara, for everything.

For anyone I've forgotten, I'm sorry!
