The Urban Book Series is a resource for urban studies and geography research worldwide. It provides a unique and innovative resource for the latest developments in the field, nurturing a comprehensive and encompassing publication venue for urban studies, urban geography, planning and regional development.

The series publishes peer-reviewed volumes related to urbanization, sustainability, urban environments, sustainable urbanism, governance, globalization, urban and sustainable development, spatial and area studies, urban management, transport systems, urban infrastructure, urban dynamics, green cities and urban landscapes. It also invites research which documents urbanization processes and urban dynamics on a national, regional and local level, welcoming case studies, as well as comparative and applied research.

The series will appeal to urbanists, geographers, planners, engineers, architects, policy makers, and to all of those interested in a wide-ranging overview of contemporary urban studies and innovations in the field. It accepts monographs, edited volumes and textbooks.

Acknowledgements

The arc of research and inquiry that finds its latest and most coherent and comprehensive expression in this volume was nourished by dialogues with innumerable colleagues and collaborators in the many institutions and associations with which I have had the privilege of being involved in various capacities over the past decades.

Thanks to Miodrag Mitrašinović, for our many conversations on public space and urbanism, especially during my residency as a visiting scholar at Parsons School of Design in 2016, during which the concept and proposal for this volume came to fruition. I am grateful to Brian McGrath and David Grahame Shane, for our conversations and their visions on the role of digital technologies in the “metacity”, and to Merve Bedir for our discussions on automation and the twenty-first-century city.

I also thank Laurent Gutierrez, with whom I co-founded and co-led the Master of Design in Urban Environments Design program at the School of Design at the Hong Kong Polytechnic University, for the rich pedagogical platform for exploration of urban issues that this program provided, and for our many exchanges on urban issues. I am also indebted to Tony Fry, with whom I had the privilege of co-teaching in this Master’s program, for constantly inspiring me, through example, to envision the future of cities and urban life as pivotal issues in the future of humans on this planet.

I also value the insights that have flowed into this text as a result of my supervisory exchanges with my PhD students during the period of preparing this manuscript: Markus Wernli, Héléne Liu and Suxin (Jasmine) Zhang. Also, the broad review of literature that forms the foundation of this book would have been immeasurably more onerous without the able and enthusiastic support of my research assistant April Liu.

Thank you also to John Frazer and Mark Burry, thesis supervisors for my AA Diploma and PhD studies, at the Architectural Association (London) and RMIT University (Melbourne), respectively, for nurturing the seeds of the perspectives on digital technologies in the built environment that inform this book. For the grounding in second-order cybernetic principles that informs the argument of this book, I am deeply indebted to Ranulph Glanville, to whose memory I hope to do justice.

Finally, I want to thank my wife Wantanee, who first encouraged me to take on this project and then endured through the long process of my bringing it to completion, for her unrelenting support, forbearance, and inspiration.
