This book is a result of over half a decade of hard work and procrastination that went into my doctorate at the University of Oxford, which could not have been possible without the love and support of friends, colleagues and my family. I would like to take this opportunity to thank them, for their patience, their love and guidance.

My thanks go to my courageous participants, who welcomed me into their lives and trusted me with their narratives. I only hope I have done justice to their accounts and will be eternally grateful for their generosity.

I am forever grateful to my supervisor, Dr David Johnson, for his support and encouragement, helping me grow as a researcher and an academic. He patiently listened to my ramblings, guided me when I got lost and, in equal measure, rejoiced when I succeeded.

I cannot thank Dr Nasar Meer enough for his support and for taking a chance on a complete stranger. He not only gave me the opportunity to publish in this series, but has also been a guiding light as I tread the murky terrain of modern day academia.

Professor Jonathan Githens-Mazer and Dr Mohammad Talib, such insightful examiners of my doctoral work, challenged me, and made me recognize my strengths and weaknesses. I thank them for their in-depth exploration of my work, which contributed to the further development of my ideas for this book.

I am further grateful to Professor Tariq Modood, Professor Tariq Ramadan and Professor Anthony Glee for taking the time to talk to a student when she was just beginning her research. Their insights were instrumental in guiding the direction of my study.

Professor Ingrid Lunt has been a source of inspiration throughout my research, teaching me how to succeed in getting my ‘licence to do research’. I hope I can live up to her expectations in the future and will always be thankful for her encouragement and support.

I extend my gratitude to Dr David Tyrer, Professor Marie Lall, Dr Katherine E. Brown, and Dr Serena Hussain, all of whom shared their experiences and were a constant source of encouragement.

I was honoured to have received the Higher Education Commission of Pakistan’s PhD scholarship for my initial years as a PhD student; I have also been supported by the Harold Hyam Wingate Foundation as their Wingate scholar in finishing my thesis, and the Al Charitable Fund and the Carr and Stahl Fund, which further supported my field trips. I will always be grateful for their generosity. Another person without whom this book would not have been possible is my editor, Amelia Derkatsch. I thank her for her patience during this publishing process.

I am also grateful to the wonderful people of St Antony’s College, especially Karin Leighton and Mastan Ebtehaj, our one-off warden Professor Margaret MacMillan, and the most supportive porters in Oxford, especially Mick, Neil and John. I thank the most generous and caring housemates of the Convent of the Sacred Heart and its Sisters, especially the late Sr Sue Acheson—I can imagine her looking down from Heaven with a smile, saying ‘Well done’.

The fact that I emerged from the doctoral experience having retained my sanity and managed to write this book is due to the support of my incredible friends; they tolerated my rants, accompanied me to midnight sessions at G&Ds, fed me chocolate when I was desperate and, despite everything, never gave up on me. Bipana Bantawa, Nahal Khabbazbashi, Pegah Zohouri Hagian, Remzi Cej and Muneera Al Khalifa who started this journey with me, I thank them for always being there no matter what, especially in the final months of my doctorate. I am grateful to Usha Kanagaratnam, Amoghavarsha Mahadevegowda, Navneet Vasistha, Sanchita Bakshi and Gunnar Langfah for being such great friends, for looking after me in the House, for feeding me and letting me hide in my room (or theirs) and, of course, Helen Pickford especially, for introducing me to Doctor Who. I thank Maria Repnikova, Roham Alvandi, Farida Makar, Eliza Gheorghie, Arthur Vissing, Şeyma Afacan, Nadiya Kravets, Fatemeh Shams, Ricardo Borges de Castro, Richard Stanley, Matteo Legrenzi and Farid Boussaid, for their support and for making St Antony's unforgettable. I thank Sara Chaudhry for encouraging me through her wisdom and experience but, most importantly, for letting me crash at her place during the field work—without her, this research would not have been possible. Sakina Jafri and Asma Niaz I thank for their phone calls and messages, especially when I was writing this book; Kashmali Khan and Izza Farrakh, for being so understanding and giving me time off from my 'real world' job to work on my book. Another friend who stood by me from the beginning, helped with my thesis and gave feedback and his critique is Ahad Ali. I am forever grateful for his encouragement and generosity. Finally, to all those colleagues who silently kept me going—a huge thank you.

While I have been very fortunate to have such supportive friends, I have been equally blessed with the most understanding and encouraging family. I am grateful to my nephew Abdullah Haroon, and my niece Daneen Haroon, to my brothers Haroon Saeed and Shahid Saeed, to my sisters-in-law Zainab Haroon and Ayesha Amin, naani ama and daadi ama (and her dum wala paani), for reminding me that anything is possible.

However, the two people who have made this book possible, made my work possible, everything I have achieved a reality, to whom I dedicate this piece of work, are my parents Zareena Saeed and Saeed uz Zaman. I feel blessed to have such selfless and loving parents, who have always encouraged me to follow my passion and never let anyone or anything get in my way. I thank my father for making sure I always had everything I needed and more. I could not have made it this far without his constant support and belief in me. There are not enough words to express my gratitude to my mother. She has been my inspiration. As a child, I enjoyed reading and learning because of her encouragement and her love for knowledge and books. She supported me throughout my doctorate, staying up nights proof-reading, editing and calming my nerves. For this book, she discussed all the latest developments and continued to edit my chapters, giving constant feedback. She has been my biggest and most constructive critic, and my strongest supporter. I thank her for making this book possible.
