ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

The cinematic philosophy project has been an amazing journey. My profound thanks:

To the European Graduate School, especially my PhD adviser, Wolfgang Schirmacher, for his unique inspiration to break boundaries. To Alain Badiou and Christopher Fynsk, whose classes on Spinoza and Heidegger, respectively, were essential to this project.

To The New School's media and film studies faculty—in particular, my inspiring mentor Rafael Parra; my illuminating film-directing professor Vladan Nikolic; my thesis advisers, Peter Haratonik and Dawnja Burris and my professors, Barry Salmon, Paolo Carpignano, Sam Ishii-Gonzales, Deirdre Boyle, and Deanna Kamiel. To my media professor Jaeho Kang and to Lisa Madison, for one vivid argument in particular, in and after class, about the capacity of the cinematic medium to create meaningful wisdom.

To Haifa University's philosophy department faculty, who made me fall in love with philosophy—in particular, Amihud Gilead for his uncanny and addictive passion for philosophy, and to my professors, Meir Hemmo, Ariel Meirav, Iddo Landau, Oded Balaban, Giora Hon, Saul Smilansky, and Ezra Talmor, as well as Haim Calev of the Cinema Department.

To my editor, Marie Deer, who emancipated the book's language and ideas and allowed them to rise to a new level of clarity.

To Jay M. Bernstein of The New School, for letting me sit in on his thought-provoking class on film and philosophy and for illuminating key features that were essential to this book. To Yirmihau Yovel of The New School, whose unparalleled class on Nietzsche convinced me to make Nietzsche key to my work.

To Thomas Wartenberg, whose groundbreaking writings on film and philosophy inspired me to take this journey. To Daniel Frampton and Dan Shaw, whose work in the field were essential to this book.

To the JDC New York Headquarters, which has served as a second home and a sanctuary for me.

To the Palgrave Macmillan team—in particular, Phil Getz, Alexis Nelson, and Robyn Curtis, who brought Cinematic Philosophy to life.

To my grandmother, Eva Rubin Barhum, who at a very young age, sparked my curiosity to explore wisdom and knowledge. And to my grandfather, Nahum Shamir, who showed me, as I served as his apprentice on his sculptures, the magical power of creating art.

Additional warm thanks to Uri Shamir, Murray Stiller, Rachel Rosenthal, Ayelet Shuber, Guy Billauer, Benjamin Sutton, Natan Zahavi, Paulette Moore, Anne Ortelee, Miriam Binyamini, Alon Greenstein, Arie Geva, and Jun Oshima.
