*To Luc Gilleman, my undergraduate senior thesis advisor at Smith College, who passed away in 2012 after a long battle with cancer. Gilleman was a deeply original and creative thinker, a brilliant scholar and passionate teacher, and one of the kindest and humblest human beings I've ever met.
His spirit is always with me.*

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

I first would like to thank my editors at Palgrave Macmillan, Shaun Vigil and Erica Buchman, for seeing this book into print; they were fantastic to work with. I mostly owe a huge debt of gratitude to my dissertation chair, Denise Albanese, who mentored me throughout my entire doctoral program and consistently challenged me always to be a better researcher, theorist, and writer. I would also like to thank Paul Smith and Timothy Gibson for their very helpful constructive criticism and feedback on this research project.

My scholarship, of course, has been greatly enriched by a number of other conversations with various peers and faculty members in the George Mason University Cultural Studies program. I am particularly thankful for the guidance of Roger Lancaster, Dina Copelman, Hugh Gusterson, and Alison Landsberg. I am also grateful to my cultural studies friends for their support and encouragement, especially Lia UyTioco, Robert Gehl, Katy Razzano, and Fan Yang. I also am deeply grateful to my colleagues and friends in the School of Integrative Studies at Mason and all of my students throughout the years. My Digital Futures students also provided some great feedback when I shared some of the earliest material from this book with them.

Lastly, I want to also thank my family. Barbara Erickson, Don Drumm, and Teresa McKee have all been wonderful supporters, as well as my younger siblings, Delia and Byron, for whom I often strive to be an inspiration, and my cousin, Celeste Champagne. I also thank Carol Pelletier for her patience, love, and support through the very long process of research, writing, and publishing.
