

Rethinking Peace and Conflict Studies

Series Editor

Oliver P. Richmond
University of Manchester
United Kingdom

This agenda-setting series of research monographs, now more than a decade old, provides an interdisciplinary forum aimed at advancing innovative new agendas for approaches to, and understandings of, peace and conflict studies and International Relations. Many of the critical volumes the series has so far hosted have contributed to new avenues of analysis directly or indirectly related to the search for positive, emancipatory, and hybrid forms of peace. New perspectives on peacemaking in practice and in theory, their implications for the international peace architecture, and different conflict-affected regions around the world, remain crucial. This series' contributions offers both theoretical and empirical insights into many of the world's most intractable conflicts and any subsequent attempts to build a new and more sustainable peace, responsive to the needs and norms of those who are its subjects.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I am in debt to the many people who have helped me in different ways while writing this book. Special thanks go to Oliver P. Richmond for inspiring me to pursue this research and for providing continuous support throughout the process. My wife, Grace Bolton-Visoka, deserves special recognition for her eternal patience, understanding, support and insightful comments on this book. While preparing this manuscript, I greatly benefited from conversations with colleagues at Dublin City University, and elsewhere, who provided me with the support and space to complete this intense project on time. I am, in particular, grateful to Professor John Doyle, DCU's Institute for International Conflict Resolution and Reconstruction (IICRR), the School of Law and Government, and the Faculty of Humanities and Social Sciences for providing financial support. Writing a book on peacebuilding and statehood in Kosovo from a local critical perspective requires extensive engagement with a broad range of interlocutors working with civil society groups, government and public institutions, international missions and organisations, and public universities. I am grateful to many of you, whom I cannot list exhaustively here, for their thoughtful and engaging conversations, and for their assistance during my many visits to Kosovo, which shaped this book. I dedicate this book to my parents, Tahir and Nexhmije Visoka, for surviving the violent conflict and enduring the ungovernable peace in Kosovo.
