

Perpetrators in Holocaust Narratives

Joanne Pettitt

Perpetrators in Holocaust Narratives

Encountering the Nazi Beast

palgrave
macmillan

Joanne Pettitt
School of European Culture and Languages
University of Kent
Kent, United Kingdom

ISBN 978-3-319-52574-7
DOI 10.1007/978-3-319-52575-4

ISBN 978-3-319-52575-4 (eBook)

Library of Congress Control Number: 2017937311

© The Editor(s) (if applicable) and The Author(s) 2017

This work is subject to copyright. All rights are solely and exclusively licensed by the Publisher, whether the whole or part of the material is concerned, specifically the rights of translation, reprinting, reuse of illustrations, recitation, broadcasting, reproduction on microfilms or in any other physical way, and transmission or information storage and retrieval, electronic adaptation, computer software, or by similar or dissimilar methodology now known or hereafter developed.

The use of general descriptive names, registered names, trademarks, service marks, etc. in this publication does not imply, even in the absence of a specific statement, that such names are exempt from the relevant protective laws and regulations and therefore free for general use. The publisher, the authors and the editors are safe to assume that the advice and information in this book are believed to be true and accurate at the date of publication. Neither the publisher nor the authors or the editors give a warranty, express or implied, with respect to the material contained herein or for any errors or omissions that may have been made. The publisher remains neutral with regard to jurisdictional claims in published maps and institutional affiliations.

Cover illustration © Gari Wyn Williams / Alamy Stock Photo

Printed on acid-free paper

This Palgrave Macmillan imprint is published by Springer Nature
The registered company is Springer International Publishing AG
The registered company address is: Gewerbestrasse 11, 6330 Cham, Switzerland

For my mum

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This book would never have been completed without the support of colleagues, friends and family. I have been continually inspired by the intellectual community at the University of Kent. Special thanks goes to Axel Stähler, whose unrelenting support has been crucial over the last few years, and without whose comments, criticisms and suggestions this book would never have been realised. Axel's calming influence has pulled me through many stressful moments; his commitment to supporting me in all matters – including those outside of his usual remit – has contributed markedly to the success of the project. I remain eternally grateful for his involvement and support.

I am also indebted to Sue Vice, who has been a tireless reader and supporter of my work, and whose comments at various stages have been hugely insightful. Sue's ongoing contributions have been essential to the completion of this project. My thanks are also due to Deborah Holmes, Rosie Spence and Lucy Jones, who painstakingly read earlier versions, and whose comments and criticisms were valued in equal measure.

I consider myself very lucky to have been a part of the Comparative Literature department at Kent. As both an undergraduate student, trying to find my way in the world, and as an impoverished PhD student, trying to forge a career for myself, the department has provided a fantastic support network. For all the intellectual exchanges and financial contributions I remain genuinely thankful. My thanks also go to my students, whose academic endeavour and passion for the study of literature has been a constant source of inspiration.

I am also grateful to those who have been on hand to help me work through my ideas at various points over the last four years. To those who have patiently listened to my academic quandaries, provided feedback on research papers, or who simply helped me drink a bottle of wine (or two), I remain truly thankful. These discussions helped to keep me sane, and to shape this book into what it has become. Although there are too many people to name, my particular thanks goes to Vered Weiss, Manal Siddiqui, Angelos Evangelou, Melanie Dilly and Carrie Eeles.

I also thank Ben Doyle at Palgrave, for encouraging and commissioning this book, and Camille Davies and the production team for seeing it through to press.

Finally, I owe eternal thanks to my long-suffering partner, Marthinus, my parents-in-law Barbara and Christo, and to my amazing dad and sister, whose unconditional love and support has been vital and to whom I dedicate this book.

Sections of this book have appeared in different form elsewhere. Some sections were published in 'Sartre, Goffman and Fictional Nazis: Homogeneity as Identity in Martin Amis' Time's Arrow (1991) and Edgar Hilsenrath's The Nazi and the Barber (1971)', Interdisciplinary Literary Studies 18.4. Copyright The Pennsylvania State University Press. This article is used by permission of The Pennsylvania State University Press.

CONTENTS

1	Introduction	1
Part I On the Humanity of Nazis: Establishing (Un-)Commonality with the Reader
2	Nazis in Society	15
3	Subverting Connections with the Reader	33
4	Drawing the Reader into the Narrative	53
Part II Between the Man and the (Nazi) Symbol
5	Cogs in the Machine: Testimonies of Holocaust Perpetrators	73
6	Adolf Hitler in Fiction and Memory	93
7	Returning to the Role of the Reader	121

Bibliography	139
Authors and Works Index	147
Index	149