ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Numerous people were instrumental in the process of writing this book. I would like to thank Craig Johnson at the University of Guelph for his wide-ranging insights that helped shape the earlier thesis version of this work. Adam Sneyd, Barry Smit, and Brian Woodrow also played pivotal roles. Jordi Díez of the University of Guelph and Arjan de Haan of IDRC provided useful critique as part of the thesis defence. I would also like to thank John Lewis, Randy Schroeder, Heidi Karst, and Korice Moir for reading and commenting on draft versions of the book. Thank you as well to the anonymous reviewer whose comments helped provide greater coherence to the argument. I would also like to thank Michael Hatton, without whom my interest in Bhutan and Gross National Happiness might have never emerged.

I owe a great debt to the many people in Bhutan who took the time to take part in the research. Their candour, openness, and grace made the research process an unforgettable one. I would also like to thank the Royal Institute of Management, and former Director Karma Tshering in particular, for hosting me. The data collection process could not have occurred as it did without the efficient and effective logistical work carried out by Lebo. I also owe an enormous debt to Jit Tshering. No thank you is large enough to represent my gratitude to Jit for his advice, support, and guidance. The nature of the book's content and any errors within it are my own.

And finally, the biggest debt of gratitude is owed to Korice, my own source of happiness, for putting up with all this. Tonight I'll be home by 5pm.

This work was carried out with the aid of a grant from the International Development Research Centre, Ottawa, Canada. Information on the Centre is available on the Web at idrc.ca.
