This leading-edge series joins two disciplines in an exploration of how music and literature confront each other as dissonant antagonists while also functioning as consonant companions. By establishing a critical connection between literature and music, this series highlights the interaction between what we read and hear. Investigating the influence music has on narrative through history, theory, culture, or global perspectives provides a concrete framework for a seemingly abstract arena. Titles in the series, both monographs and edited volumes, explore musical encounters in novels and poetry, considerations of the ways in which narratives appropriate musical structures, examinations of musical form and function, and studies of interactions with sound.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This book has been a long time in the making and I have benefited from the advice, organisation and assistance of many more people than I can mention here, both in terms of discussions and events specifically relevant to this book's content and in the wider support and fellowship that makes scholarship possible. In particular, I would like to thank my colleagues and friends at Leeds Trinity University and, more recently, Sheffield Hallam University, especially Amina Alyal, Richard Storer, Jane de Gay, Martyn Bedford, Oz Hardwick, Juliette Taylor-Batty, Kate Lister, Rosemary Mitchell, Di Drummond, Joyce Simpson and Maureen Meikle, and Katharine Cox, Charles Mundy, Dan Cadman, Matthew Steggle, Lisa Hopkins and Annaliese Connolly. Helen Kingstone read parts of the manuscript and offered constructive feedback and support. Liz Oakley-Brown, Liam Haydon, Kit Heyam, Laurence Publicover, Chloe Preedy, Andy Kesson and Jacomien Prins offered comments on versions of work from this book that they will have long forgotten by now. Martin Butler has been extremely helpful and encouraging, as have the attendees and speakers at Renaissance research seminars at Leeds University over the years. Thanks are due to members of the British Shakespeare Association board of trustees past and present for their encouragement, and also to everyone at Palgrave for their assistance and interest in the project.

David Lindley supervised the Ph.D. that (eventually) gave rise to parts of this book, and his mentoring and good-humoured advice has been invaluable. My fellow Leeds alumni and co. have continued to challenge me intellectually while supporting me in friendship, especially Gillian Roberts, Catherine Bates, Gareth Jackson, Milena Marinkova, Jennifer Sarha, Caroline Herbert, Elizabeth Throesch, Edel Porter, Jeff Orr, Kaley Kramer and Nasser Hussain. Love and thanks are due to the Andersons, Kirwans and Gillams, especially Chloe, Neville, Roland, Karina and my mother Liz. Most of all, Pete Kirwan has enabled, encouraged, cajoled and inspired me during the writing of this book, going far beyond the call of duty to support in both word and deed, for which I offer my most heartfelt thanks.
