

The European Heritage in Economics and the Social Sciences

The European heritage in economics and the social sciences is largely locked in languages other than English. Witness such classics as Storch's Cours d'Economie Politique, Wicksell's Finanztheoretische Untersuchungen und Geld, Zins und Güterpreise or Pareto's Trattato di Sociologia Generale. Since about 1937, partly caused by the forced exodus of many scholars from the German language countries and the international reactions to this event, English has become the undisputed primary language of economics and the social sciences. For about one generation, this language shift did not result in a loss of access to the European non-English sources. However, after foreign language requirements were dropped as entry pre-requisites for receiving the PhD at major research universities, the European heritage in economics and the social sciences has become largely inaccessible to the vast majority of practicing scholars.

In this series, we hope to publish works that address this problem in a threefold manner. An aspect of the European heritage in a language other than English should be critically documented and discussed, reconstructed and assessed from a modern scientific point of view, and tested with respect to its relevance for contemporary economic, social, or political discourse.

We welcome submissions that fit this bill in order to make the European heritage in economics and the social sciences available to the international research community of scholars in economics and the social sciences.

Acknowledgements

Several persons deserve special gratitude in the context of the Geneva conference and the current volume. Pierre Bessard, Director of the Liberal Institute Zurich, was heavily involved from the very beginning in co-organizing and co-financing the conference, also by adding an extra day to the format with public lectures on Röpke's ongoing relevance. These public lectures have very recently been published as "Wilhelm Röpke Today", edited by Pierre Bessard. We would also like to thank Professor Philippe Burrin, Director of the Graduate Institute of International and Development Studies, as well as Davide Rodogno for their generous hospitality in hosting the conference at the Graduate Institute. Along with the contributions of the Wilhelm Röpke Institute and of the Centre AGORA at the University of Cergy-Pontoise, the financial support of the Aktionsgemeinschaft Soziale Marktwirtschaft and its Director, Professor Nils Goldschmidt, was particularly valuable.

As editors of the volume, we would like to express our gratitude to the 19 contributors and to our lector at Springer Nature, Dr. Johannes Glaeser, for his very early interest in the outcome of the conference and for his highly professional and flexible guidance throughout the project. Sivachandran Ramanan's technical support enabled us to handle the formal aspects of the manuscript processing, while Matthew Gill's assistance was very helpful for the stylistic quality of the text. Last but not least, we are grateful to the editor of the series "The European Heritage in Economics and the Social Sciences", Professor Jürgen Georg Backhaus, for his willingness to include our volume into the series.
