ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I would like to thank the following friends and colleagues—Kristyn Gorton, Clare Hanson, Maroula Joannou, Emma Parker and Susan Watkins—who, over a period of time, have discussed with me the ideas developed in this study and who have listened to and read much of the material in various formats. They have generously offered both interest and insight. I am also grateful to colleagues at the universities of Brighton, Durham, Leicester, Nottingham, Oxford and Southampton for inviting me to speak on this topic and I greatly appreciate the helpful suggestions and questions from the audiences. Members of the Contemporary Women’s Writing Association continue to provide an informative and stimulating network for any research in this area and I have profited from many conversations, conferences and events. At several points in this study, I draw on material from two previous publications: ‘The Anxious Lives of Clever Girls: The University Novels of Margaret Drabble, A. S. Byatt, and Hilary Mantel’, Tulsa Studies in Women’s Literature Vol. 33, No. 2 (Fall 2015), pp. 103–21, and ‘Finding Her Place: “Success,” Space, and Subjectivity’, Anglo Saxonica Ser.111, N.6 (2013), pp. 153–76. Colleagues at these journals have kindly granted permission for me to use this material.

My sincere thanks go to Ben Doyle who continues to be the most astute and encouraging of editors and to Camille Davies who has ably guided me at every stage. Palgrave’s anonymous readers encouraged this work through their positive responses and, along the way, offered very useful advice. Finally, the efficient professionalism of the production staff, Raghupathy Kalynaraman and Shruthi Krishna, brought the study to life.

My major debt and thanks are to David Pierce, Matthew Eagleton-Pierce and Ammara Maqsood, whose loving support enables everything I do. I hope I give something in return to help their own ongoing publishing ventures.
