Acknowledgments

I want to thank the following people for reading the manuscript and offering helpful feedback: Jake Beck, Tyler James Bennett, Vincent Colapietro, Chris Green, Henry Jackman, David Jopling, Kalevi Kull, Cathy Legg, Christine McKinnon, and David Skrbina (naturally, I bear sole responsibility for any mistakes or errors in the book). Kristin Andrews and David Stamos gave me good tips in the early stages of this project. Jelena Issajeva organized a stimulating symposium on the book at the 2015 Toward a Science of Consciousness Conference. Ahti-Veikko Pietarinen enabled a productive year of research at the University of Helsinki. My colleagues at Trent University fostered a supportive work environment. I want to thank David Chalmers for his words of encouragement. I also want to thank Henrik Lagerlund and Mikko Yrjönsuuri for curating this exciting series in philosophy of mind. Parts of this book have appeared, in different versions, in the following venues:

- Champagne M (2016) Can pragmatists believe in qualia? The founder of pragmatism certainly did... Cybernetics and Human Knowing 23(2): 39–49
- Champagne M (2015) Poinset versus Peirce on merging with reality by sharing a quality. Versus 120: 31–43
- Champagne M (2014) Referring to the qualitative dimension of consciousness: Iconicity instead of indexicality. Dialogue: Canadian Philosophical Review 53(1): 135–182
- Champagne M (2013) Choosing between the long and short informational routes to psychological explanation. Philosophical Psychology 26(1): 129–138
- Champagne M (2012) Russell and the Newman problem revisited. Analysis and Metaphysics 11: 65–74
- Champagne M (2009) Explaining the qualitative dimension of consciousness: Precission instead of reification. Dialogue: Canadian Philosophical Review 48(1): 145–183
