This book series addresses the urgent need to advance knowledge in the fields of cybercrime and cybersecurity. Because the exponential expansion of computer technologies and use of the Internet have greatly increased the access by criminals to people, institutions, and businesses around the globe, the series will be international in scope. It provides a home for cutting-edge long-form research. Further, the series seeks to spur conversation about how traditional criminological theories apply to the online environment. The series welcomes contributions from early career researchers as well as established scholars on a range of topics in the cybercrime and cybersecurity fields.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I am indebted to a number of individuals and organisations without whose support, time and encouragement, I would have been unable to undertake the research or write this book. Catherine Pope, Craig Webber, Mark Weal, David Wall, staff and my fellow cohort at the Web Science Doctoral Training Centre at the University of Southampton, for their direction and collaboration during my PhD. To the participants, without you there would be no study and so I thank you for engaging with the research, and myself and for providing such valuable insights into a little known phenomenon. Sincere thanks go to my colleagues at the Institute of Criminal Justice Studies at the University of Portsmouth, I could not ask for a more supportive and academically stimulating environment to be based in. To my students, past, present and future; having the privilege to teach is one of the very best parts about academia, and I thank you for the passion and motivation you inspire in me. Thanks also go to Steph Carey and Josie Taylor at Palgrave for their help and assistance, it has been a pleasure to work with you both.

Moreover, I thank my family and friends, thank you for your continuous love, reassurance and the confidence that you instill in me; I could not have done this without you. Dad, thank you for always believing in me and for being a constant source of inspiration. Matt, I thank you for consistently being there and for incentivising and comforting me when needed. Dylan, I am already so proud of you and the person you are becoming,

I hope you continue to be kind, conscientious and socially aware. To Mum, Kev, Denise, Dot, Bill, Adam, Terhi, and Josh, thank you too for being in my life and the personal and intellectual stimulation you provide. Finally, I would like to dedicate this book to Laura, an exceptional academic, beautiful person – inside and out, and amazing friend. I miss you.
