For Mark Fisher: A Scholar of the Future

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This book would not have been possible without a great team of supporters. Biggest thanks to Ben Doyle at Palgrave Macmillan for his infinite positivity and to Camille Davies for getting the Pivot to print. A huge debt of gratitude is also extended to Professor Deborah Philips for offering critical readings of draft versions for the meagre price of gin and a mention in the acknowledgements. Done!

Special thanks for David Peace, and to Faber, for granting access to a manuscript copy of Patient X prior to its publication. David has extended his unswerving support and enthusiasm for this work since day one and for that, and his friendship, I am eternally grateful.

A sabbatical from Leeds Beckett University was instrumental to the writing process. Particular thanks for critical conversations go to some brilliant academic women: Dr Rachel Connor, Dr Caroline Herbert, Professor Susan Watkins and Professor Gina Wisker. Support from Northumbria University was vital in finishing the work and many thanks for this go to Professor Julian Wright, Professor Richard Terry and Dr Katherine Baxter.

Personal thanks, as always, to my parents for their unconditional love, and to my brother for reading draft versions of Chapter 3. Thanks also to my friends for putting up with the strange obsessions of academic life. Special thanks to Dan, for everything.

During the writing of this book, the world lost one of its leading hauntology scholars. Mark Fisher was a unique and original thinker whose influence haunts this work. His contribution to the field was defining, and his loss tragic. The following study was written with the intention of continuing the work of K-Punk into the future—informed by his writings, and inspired by his spirit.
