ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This book would not have been possible without the dedication of its contributors. Therefore we, as editors, would like to say thank you first and foremost to our colleagues who were willing to engage with us in this project on world society and modern subjectivities. Secondly, we are grateful for the constructive comments of the two anonymous reviewers that contributed to the improvement of our manuscript. The two workshops which laid the foundation to this book took place in the framework of the Modern Muslim Subjectivities Project (MMSP) conducted at the Centre for Contemporary Middle East Studies, University of Southern Denmark. The sub-projects of the MMSP have been funded by the private VELUX Foundation and the Danish Council for Independent Research in the Humanities (FKK). A special thanks therefore goes to these two funding institutions without whose generous financial support our joint research for this book would not have been possible. In addition, we would like to thank the Bundeswehr University Munich for funding parts of our first workshop at the Georg-von-Vollmar-Akademie in Kochel, held in fall 2015. Many thanks to Fabian Schneider for his support in the organization of this workshop. In completing the manuscript we had the pleasure of working together with Catherine Schwerin, who carried out the excellent language editing, and with Eliza Friederichs who helped in editing the draft chapters. To both goes our full gratitude. Finally, we would like to thank the series editors of Palgrave Studies in International Relations and Sarah Roughley from Palgrave Macmillan for accepting our manuscript and turning it into a real book.

NOTES ON CONTRIBUTORS

Peter Beyer has been Professor of Religious Studies (sociology of religion) at the University of Ottawa, Canada, since 1995. In the early part of his career, his research focused on issues in the nineteenth and twentieth century religious history of Canada, particularly French Canadian Roman Catholicism. Currently, his major areas of expertise include religion and globalization, sociological theory of religion, religion and migration, and religion in contemporary Canada, especially as concerns the religious diversity that has resulted from post-1970 immigration. His publications include Religion and Globalization (Sage, 1994), Religion in the Process of Globalization (ed., Ergon, 2001), and Religions in Global Society (Routledge, 2006), Religion, Globalization, and Culture (ed. with Lori Beaman, Brill, 2007), Religion and Diversity in Canada (ed. with Lori Beaman, Brill, 2008), Religion in the Context of Globalization (Routledge, 2013), and Growing Up Canadian: Muslims, Hindus, Buddhists (ed. With Rubina Ramji, McGill-Queen's, 2013), as well as around 70 articles and chapters in scholarly journals and edited volumes. He is currently completing research projects on the construction of religious identity and religious diversity in Canada, as well as developing further theory on religious transformation in contemporary global society.

Pinar Bilgin is a Professor of International Relations and Head of the Department of Political Science and Public Administration at Bilkent University. She holds a Ph.D. in International Politics from the University of Wales, Aberystwyth (2000), an M.Sc. in Strategic Studies from UWA, an M.A. in International Relations from Bilkent University, and a B.Sc. in International Relations from Middle East Technical University. She is the author of Regional Security in the Middle East: A Critical Perspective (2005) and The International in Security, Security in the International (2016), and co-editor of the Routledge Handbook of International Political Sociology (with Xavier Guillaume, forthcoming in 2017) and Asia in International Relations: Unthinking Imperial Power Relations (with L. H. M. Ling, forthcoming in 2017). She served as Associate Editor of Security Dialogue during 2008–2013 and Associate Editor of International Political Sociology during 2012–2017. She is the co-editor (with Monica Herz) of the new Palgrave book series, Critical Security Studies in the Global South. She is an associate member of the Turkish Academy of Sciences.

Paul Bramadat is Professor and Director of the Centre for Studies in Religion and Society at the University of Victoria, in Canada. His main research interests concern the intersections between secularism, public discourse, religious radicalization, securitization, post-colonialism, and religious identity in contemporary Canada. Key publications include The Church on the World's Turf (Oxford University Press, 2000), which examines the ways religious sub-cultures can thrive in largely secular environments; and co-edited volumes such as Religion and Ethnicity in Canada (Pearson, 2005), Christianity and Ethnicity in Canada (University of Toronto Press, 2008), International Migration and the Governance of Religious Diversity (McGill-Queen's University Press, 2009), Spirituality and Hospice Palliative Care (SUNY, 2013), Religious Radicalization in Canada and Beyond (University of Toronto Press, 2014), and Public Health in the Age of Anxiety: Religious and Cultural Roots of Vaccine Hesitancy in Canada (University of Toronto Press, 2017). Scholarly chapters have appeared in numerous edited volumes exploring religion and law, youth culture, and public controversies; scholarly articles have appeared in journals such as: Studies in Religion, Canadian Ethnic Studies, and the Journal of the American Academy of Religion.

Jan Busse is Lecturer and Research Fellow at the Department of Global Politics and Conflict Studies at the Bundeswehr University Munich. He holds a M.Sc. in Global Politics from the London School of Economics and Political Science (LSE) and a B.A. in Political Science from Bielefeld University, Germany. He is a member of the Arab German Young Academy of Sciences and Humanities. His research focuses on International Political Sociology and, in particular, on Foucauldian post-structuralism and (de-)constructionist theories of global order. His regional focus lies on societal and political dynamics in the Middle East. He is author of the book De-Constructing the Dynamics of World-Societal Order: The Power of Governmentality in Palestine (Routledge, 2018), and he has published in peer-reviewed journals such as International Political Sociology and Middle East Critique. In addition, he has researched and published on German foreign policy toward the Israeli–Palestinian Conflict. He regularly writes consultancy reports on the political and economic situation in Palestine for the German Federal Ministry of Economic Cooperation and Development (BMZ).

Dietrich Jung is a Professor and Head of the Center for Contemporary Middle East Studies, University of Southern Denmark. He holds an M.A. in Political Science and Islamic Studies, as well as a Ph.D. from the Faculty of Philosophy and Social Sciences, University of Hamburg, Germany. He has a large field experience in the Muslim world, and his research covers the modernization of the Muslim world, war and conflicts in the Middle East, world society theory, historical sociology, and the sociology of religion. He is series editor of the Palgrave series The Modern Muslim World, Palgrave Macmillan, New York, and his most recent books are Orientalists, Islamists and the Global Public Sphere: A Genealogy of the Modern Essentialist Image of Islam, Sheffield: Equinox (2011), The Politics of Modern Muslim Subjectivities: Islam, Youth and Social Activism in the Middle East, together with Marie Juul Petersen and Sara Lei Sparre, New York, Palgrave (2014), The Levant in Turmoil: Syria, Palestine, and the Transformation of Middle Eastern Politics, edited with Martin Beck and Peter Seeberg, New York, Palgrave (2016) and Muslim History and Social Theory: A Sociology of Global Modernity, New York, Palgrave (2017).

Martin Ledstrup is Postdoctoral Fellow at the Centre for Contemporary Middle East Studies, University of Southern Denmark (SDU), from where he also received his Ph.D. He researches how assumptions about modernity and the social are negotiated in the everyday of peripheral areas in the modern welfare state. While his Ph.D. took everyday nationhood in the Emirate of Ras al Khaimah into a dialogue with classical European social theory, his current research focuses on the everyday between Middle Eastern refugees and local citizens in the island communities of Scandinavia. These projects are united by an empirical interest in the sociality of peripheral geography and a theoretical engagement, not least, with the textual universe of Georg Simmel. He has a forthcoming article on interaction and Emirati nationhood in Journal of Arabian Studies as well a forthcoming book—entitled Encountering Emiratiness—which is due to be published with Palgrave Macmillan by the end of 2018.

Siniša Malešević is a Professor of Sociology at the University College, Dublin. He is also an elected member of the Royal Irish Academy and Academia Europae. Previously he held appointments at the Institute for International Relations (Zagreb), the Centre for the Study of Nationalism, CEU (Prague), the National University of Ireland, Galway, the London School of Economics, the Institute for Human Sciences (Vienna), and Université Libre de Bruxelles (Eric Remacle Chair in Conflict and Peace Studies). His main areas of research are: the study of war and organized violence, ethnicity and nationalism, ideology, sociological theory, and comparative historical sociology. His recent books include The Rise of Organised Brutality: A Historical Sociology of Violence (CUP, 2017), Nation-States and Nationalisms: Organisation, Ideology and Solidarity (Polity, 2013); The Sociology of War and Violence (CUP, 2010), Identity as Ideology (Palgrave, 2006), The Sociology of Ethnicity (Sage, 2004), and edited volumes Ernest Gellner and Historical Sociology (Thesis Eleven, Special Issue, 2015), Nationalism and War (CUP, 2013) and Ernest Gellner and Contemporary Social Thought (CUP, 2007). He has authored over 70 peer-reviewed journal articles and book chapters and has given more than 100 invited talks all over the world. His work has been translated into Croatian, Persian, Turkish, Portuguese, Russian, Serbian, and Spanish.

Thomas J. Puleo is a geographer living in Oakland, California, in the United States. He focuses his work on three themes: the role of landscapes in place resilience, the function of the arts and humanities in engaging these landscapes, and the power of inanimate agencies in this dynamic. The spate of earthquakes that have struck central Italy in recent years, and economic, political, social, cultural, and psychological responses to them, on personal, municipal, national, and global scales, are of particular interest. Key publications include a book, The Valtellina and Unesco: Making a Global Landscape, published by Lexington Books in 2012, and three journal articles: Art-making as place-making following disaster, in Progress in Human Geography (2014); The Sicilian Baroque: reconciling postquake tensions, in Environment and Planning A (2014); and Baroque Disruptions in Val di Noto, Sicily, in Geographical Review (2010).

Stephan Stetter is a Professor of Global Politics and Conflict Studies and Dean of the Faculty of Social Sciences and Public Affairs at the Bundeswehr University Munich. He holds an M.Sc. (LSE) in European Politics and Policy as well as a Ph.D. from the Department of Government at LSE. His main research foci are theories of world society, social evolution theory, and historical international political sociology. Empirically, his work focuses on the Middle East, Euro-Mediterranean relations and EU foreign politics. He is editor of the leading German language IR journal, the Zeitschrift für Internationale Beziehungen. Key publications are The Middle East and Globalization: Encounters and Horizons, ed., New York: Palgrave (2012), World Society and the Middle East: Reconstructions in Regional Politics, London: Palgrave (2008), and Ordnung und Wandel in der Weltpolitik: Konturen einer Soziologie der Internationalen Beziehungen (Order and Change in World Politics: Contours of a Sociology of International Relations), Baden-Baden: Nomos (2013). He is co-editor of a book series on politics and society in the Middle East by VS Springer. He has published widely in leading peer-reviewed journals and books.

George M. Thomas is Professor of Politics and Global Studies at Arizona State University. He has a long-term interest in how world society and cultural processes constitute identities and authority, thereby affecting state and society and social movements. One ongoing line of study is on how global processes affect religious identities and practices in everyday life and on the different ways in which religious people actively engage these dynamics. This work highlights the importance of religious rights at local, nation-state, and international levels. Current projects analyze religious rights decisions of the European Court of Human Rights and theorize new religious forms of engaging globalization. He has published research on world culture/world society theory, non-state actors, and religion in world society. Publications include: 'World Polity, World Culture, World Society,' International Political Sociology 3(1): 115–119, 2009; 'Constructing World Civil Society through Contentions Over Religious Rights,' Journal of Human Rights

3 (June): 239–251, 2004; Constructing World Culture: International Nongovernmental Organizations Since 1875 (co-editor with John Boli, Stanford University Press, 1999); (with J. W. Meyer, J. Boli, and F. O. Ramirez) ‘World Society and the Nation-State,’ American Journal of Sociology 103 (July): 144–181, 1997; Revivalism and Cultural Change (University of Chicago Press, 1989).
