For Jayden, Madison and Grace whose stories are at the very heart of this book; I hope I have done them justice.

Acknowledgements

I would like to extend my thanks first and foremost to Pauline Dooley and Suki Desai. Their advice, support and enthusiasm for the project were invaluable throughout and particularly in times of crisis. Their comments were stimulating and challenging, and at times frankly annoying, but fundamental in shaping the research project and hence this book into its final form. I could not have wished for more perceptive, cheerful and good-humoured critical friends. I would also like to acknowledge Prof. Mary Fuller and Dr. Janet Rose who were there at the beginning and significant in the initial design of the project, and Dr. Malcolm MacLean who provided advice along the way and helped me to see a way forward when I thought I couldn't go on. Thanks also to friends and colleagues, old and new, at Staffordshire University for their interest and support throughout this long and sometimes difficult process. Grateful thanks to Amelia Derkatsch, commissioning editor at Palgrave for giving me this chance.

Thank you from the bottom of my heart to my son Jack Bizzell, not only for his technical support, but also for his belief in what I was doing and his conviction that I should do it. I hope he realises how important this has been in driving me on to completion. Thanks also to the other members of my wonderful family: my resourceful and enterprising children, Robbie, Charlotte and Jay for bringing themselves up whilst I was otherwise engaged at the computer, and my incredible little granddaughter Lilly-May who crashed into my world mid-project and provided endless mystifying distractions from it. Thanks also to my mum, my brother Jamie and my niece Millie for food, wine and encouragement, and for inspiring me with their intrepid and resilient approaches to life. Last, but by no means least, a very special thank you is due to my partner Ade Lewis for his stoical support, camaraderie and feigned interest as we trek through life in our own little worlds together.
