ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I would like to thank my colleagues at Aarhus University for their invaluable feedback on rough drafts of the book, especially Susan Yi Sencindiver, Jens Kjeldgaard-Christiansen, and Matthias Stephan, as well as the Cultural Transformations research group for organising writing retreats with plenty of cake.

Thanks also go to my students in the BA project course “American Apocalypse: Visions of Armageddon in Modern American Culture,” the MA course “Old, New, and Transmedia Fictions of Disaster: Modern Media and the Apocalypse,” and the BA elective “Media Convergence.” They were unfailingly knowledgeable, patient, and articulate in explaining what was wrong with my concepts, how the way people engage with media has changed, what social media is, the most revolutionary changes in major narrative media, and why I should get rid of my old Nokia and for the love of God get a smartphone. I hope they also learned something.

Thanks finally to Lina Aboujeb and Ellie Freedman at Palgrave Macmillan for their encouragement, professionalism, and tactful reminders that those deadlines I had blithely agreed to a few months back were arriving on Friday. I would still be doodling in the margins of a half-written Chap. 4 if it weren’t for their support.
