This book is dedicated to Caitlín R. Kiernan and Thomas Ligotti, who have opened holes in the world that can never be closed, and to the late, greatly lamented David G. Hartwell, whose editorial vision helped shape the course of horror literature in the late twentieth century and who did so much to promote and refine it.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

The impetus for this collection came from conversations with many friends and colleagues, some of whose critical works can be found in the pages that follow. Others, whose work doesn't appear between these covers, also deserve thanks for their inspiration of, suggestions for, or help with this volume: these include Aalya Ahmad, S. J. Bagley, Rajiv Bhola, Matt Cardin, Bobby Derie, Robert D'Errico, Derek Newman-Stille, David Nickle, Lydia Peever, Dennis Quinn, and Ranylt Richildis. This book also came about in part due to work presented in the Horror Literature Division of the ever-generative International Conference on the Fantastic in the Arts. My thanks go to the conference organizers and to Rhonda Brock-Servais, former Division Head and perpetual High Priestess of Horror. Thanks are also due to the Association of part-time professors at the University of Ottawa, for helping fund my annual participation in the conference.

Most importantly, my boundless gratitude belongs to my wife, Madeleine, who makes everything possible, including playing the dancing clown machine.

NOTES ON CONTRIBUTORS

Alissa Burger is Assistant Professor of English and Director of Writing Across the Curriculum at Culver-Stockton College. She teaches courses in research, writing, and literature, including a single-author seminar on Stephen King. She is the author of Teaching Stephen King: Horror, The Supernatural, and New Approaches to Literature (Palgrave, 2016) and The Wizard of Oz as American Myth: A Critical Study of Six Versions of the Story, 1900–2007 (2012) and editor of the collection Teaching Graphic Novels in the English Classroom: Pedagogical Possibilities of Multimodal Literacy Engagement (Palgrave, 2017).

Michael Cisco is the author of the novels The Divinity Student, The Tyrant, The San Veneficio Canon, The Traitor, The Narrator, The Great Lover, Celebrant, and MEMBER, and a short story collection, Secret Hours. His fiction has appeared in The Weird, Lovecraft Unbound, and Black Wings (among others). His scholarly work has appeared in Lovecraft Studies, The Weird Fiction Review, Iranian Studies, Lovecraft and Influence, and The Lovecraftian Poe. He teaches in CUNY Hostos, New York City.

Mathias Clasen is Assistant Professor of Literature and Media at Aarhus University, Denmark. He specializes in supernatural horror in literature and film, particularly modern American horror, and he has published works on zombies, vampires, Richard Matheson, Dan Simmons, and Bram Stoker. His work aims at explaining the functions and forms of horrifying entertainment by situating the study of the genre within a framework informed by evolutionary and cognitive psychology as well as neuroscience. His monograph Why Horror Seduces (2018) investigates modern American horror in film, literature, and video gaming within a scientific framework.

John Glover is the Humanities Research Librarian at Virginia Commonwealth University, where he supports students and faculty in their research and instruction, pursues various outreach programs, and directs Digital Pragmata, a digital arts and humanities initiative. In 2015 he presented “Node, Edge, or Tentacle: Data and the Lovecraftian Literary Network” at the 36th International Conference on the Fantastic in the Arts. His research interests include humanities librarianship, digital humanities, literary horror, and the research practices of creative writers. He speaks regularly on research for creative writers, and in spring 2015, he co-taught “Writing Researched Fiction” in VCU’s Department of English. As “J. T. Glover,” he writes fiction and non-fiction, and his work has appeared in The Children of Old Leech, The Lovecraft eZine, and New Myths, among others.

Brian R. Hauser is Assistant Professor of Film at Clarkson University in Potsdam, New York. He has published essays on The X-Files and its relation to the vanishing Americans in James Fenimore Cooper’s novels, a rhetorical narrative theory approach to cinematic adaptation, and the importance of DIY-independent cinema. He is also a filmmaker and screenwriter, who won the 2010 H. P. Lovecraft Film Festival Screenwriting Competition with his feature-length script Cult Flick. He is completing a monograph on weird cinema.

Brian Johnson is Associate Professor and Graduate Chair of English at Carleton University where he teaches theory, genre fiction, and Canadian literature. Recent publications include essays on serial killing in Canadian crime fiction, the pedagogy of horror, libidinal ecology in Swamp Thing, and alien genesis in H. P. Lovecraft and Ridley Scott’s Prometheus. His research focuses on weird fiction, superheroes, and sexuality.

S. T. Joshi is a freelance writer and editor. He has prepared comprehensive editions of Lovecraft’s collected fiction, essays, and poetry. He is also the author of The Weird Tale (1990), The Modern Weird Tale (2001), and Unutterable Horror: A History of Supernatural Fiction (2012). His award-winning biography H. P. Lovecraft: A Life (1996) was later expanded as I Am Providence: The Life and Times of H. P. Lovecraft (2010). He has also prepared Penguin Classics editions of the work of Arthur Machen, Lord Dunsany, Algernon Blackwood, M. R. James, and Clark Ashton Smith, as well as the anthology American Supernatural Tales (2007).

Helen Marshall is a critically acclaimed author, editor, and medievalist. After receiving a PhD from the prestigious Centre for Medieval Studies at the University of Toronto, she spent two years completing a postdoctoral fellowship at the University of Oxford, investigating literature written during the time of the Black Death. She was recently appointed Lecturer of Creative Writing and Publishing at Anglia Ruskin University in Cambridge, England.

Sean Moreland His essays, primarily focused on Gothic, horror and weird fiction in its literary, cinematic, and sequential art guises, have appeared in many collections, encyclopaedic volumes, and journals, most recently Lovecraftian Proceedings 2 and The Oxford Handbook of Edgar Allan Poe. He recently edited The Lovecraftian Poe: Essays on Influence, Reception, Interpretation and Transformation (2017). He is in the midst of a monograph, tentatively titled Repulsive Influences: A Historical Poetics of Atomic Horror, which examines how horror literature since the early eighteenth century has interwoven with the reception of Lucretius's De Rerum Natura in shaping popular anxieties about materialism and mortality. He teaches in the English Department at the University of Ottawa and occasionally conducts interviews, writes reviews, and blogs about weirdness at Postscripts to Darkness (www.pstdarkness.com).

Sharon Packer is a psychiatrist and psychopharmacologist in private practice and Assistant Clinical Professor of Psychiatry at Icahn School of Medicine at Mount Sinai. She is also an author and a prolific writer whose most recent book is Neuroscience in Science Fiction (2015).

Vivian Ralickas holds her PhD in Comparative Literature from the University of Toronto. Her published works include art criticism, translations, and two essays on Lovecraft: "Art, Cosmic Horror, and the Fetishizing Gaze in the Fiction of H. P. Lovecraft" (2008) and "'Cosmic Horror' and the Question of the Sublime in Lovecraft" (2007). She teaches English Composition and Literature, including courses on horror fiction and Dandyism, at Marianopolis College in Montreal.

Gina Wisker is Professor of Contemporary Literature and Higher Education. Her principal teaching, PhD supervision, and research interests lie in contemporary women's writing, Gothic, horror, and postcolonial writing. Her published works include Margaret Atwood, an Introduction to Critical Views of Her Fiction (2012), Key Concepts in Postcolonial Writing (2007), Horror Fiction (2005), and Postcolonial and African American Women's Writing (2000).
