Acknowledgements

This book is the result of a long-haul enterprise that would not have been possible without the support of many people.

During my fieldwork in both Switzerland and Britain, I met women and men who trusted me enough to share parts of their lives and some of their opinions with me, and who sometimes pointed me towards other potential respondents. I can never thank them enough, and I hope that they will recognise themselves in my analyses.

I am very grateful to Janine Dahinden, my dissertation supervisor, for her continual support from the very start. I have enjoyed every academic discussion and glass of wine with her.

The members of my Dissertation Committee, Boris Nieswand, Louise Ryan and Camille Schmoll, read earlier versions of this book: I owe a tighter final argument to their critical yet constructive comments. Two anonymous reviewers also contributed to improving this book.

I have also been fortunate to write this book in a thoroughly stimulating environment, the Laboratory for the Study of Social Processes, and to spend time with amazing colleagues there. In particular, I want to thank Christine Achermann, Nolwenn Buehler, Giada de Coulon, Kerstin Duemmler, Aylin Eriksen, Carolin Fischer, Anne Lavanchy, Joanna Menet, Yvonne Riaño and Marc Tadorian. I have benefited from their numerous suggestions when struggling with theoretical, methodological, strategic and practical problems – but also, and importantly, from their friendship.

I would also like to thank Steven Vertovec and the administrative and academic staff at the Max Planck Institute for the Study of Religious and Ethnic Diversity for their warm welcome during my time there in 2011 and 2012.

I am grateful to the institutions that have contributed financially to this study and its publication: the Swiss National Science Foundation, the Equal Opportunities Office and the Faculty of Humanities at the University of Neuchâtel, as well the nccr – on the move, also at the University of Neuchâtel. I take the opportunity to thank Daniel Moure for his respectful and precise editing work.

Finally, I want to express my deepest gratitude to my family and close friends for their encouragement, support and love, in particular my parents and their partners, my mother-in-law and of course my partner David and the wonderful Olivia and Nine, who have survived the journey.
