

Studies in Childhood and Youth

Series Editors

Afua Twum-Danso Imoh
University of Sheffield
Sheffield, UK

Nigel Thomas
University of Central Lancashire
Preston, UK

Spyros Spyrou
European University Cyprus
Nicosia, Cyprus

Penny Curtis
University of Sheffield
Sheffield, UK

This well-established series embraces global and multi-disciplinary scholarship on childhood and youth as social, historical, cultural and material phenomena. With the rapid expansion of childhood and youth studies in recent decades, the series encourages diverse and emerging theoretical and methodological approaches. We welcome proposals which explore the diversities and complexities of children's and young people's lives and which address gaps in the current literature relating to childhoods and youth in space, place and time.

Studies in Childhood and Youth will be of interest to students and scholars in a range of areas, including Childhood Studies, Youth Studies, Sociology, Anthropology, Geography, Politics, Psychology, Education, Health, Social Work and Social Policy.

More information about this series at <http://www.palgrave.com/gp/series/14474>

Sadia Habib • Michael R. M. Ward
Editors

Identities, Youth and Belonging

International Perspectives

palgrave
macmillan

Editors

Sadia Habib
Independent Scholar
Manchester, UK

Michael R. M. Ward
Swansea University
Swansea, UK

Studies in Childhood and Youth

ISBN 978-3-319-96112-5

ISBN 978-3-319-96113-2 (eBook)

<https://doi.org/10.1007/978-3-319-96113-2>

Library of Congress Control Number: 2018954839

© The Editor(s) (if applicable) and The Author(s) 2019

This work is subject to copyright. All rights are solely and exclusively licensed by the Publisher, whether the whole or part of the material is concerned, specifically the rights of translation, reprinting, reuse of illustrations, recitation, broadcasting, reproduction on microfilms or in any other physical way, and transmission or information storage and retrieval, electronic adaptation, computer software, or by similar or dissimilar methodology now known or hereafter developed.

The use of general descriptive names, registered names, trademarks, service marks, etc. in this publication does not imply, even in the absence of a specific statement, that such names are exempt from the relevant protective laws and regulations and therefore free for general use.

The publisher, the authors and the editors are safe to assume that the advice and information in this book are believed to be true and accurate at the date of publication. Neither the publisher nor the authors or the editors give a warranty, express or implied, with respect to the material contained herein or for any errors or omissions that may have been made. The publisher remains neutral with regard to jurisdictional claims in published maps and institutional affiliations.

Cover illustration: © Brain light / Alamy Stock Photo

This Palgrave Macmillan imprint is published by the registered company Springer Nature Switzerland AG
The registered company address is: Gewerbestrasse 11, 6330 Cham, Switzerland

Foreword

In the intellectual frameworks that guide academic and social policy understandings about young people, it is taken for granted that youth is fundamentally about time. Indeed, in many ways, the historical development of the notion of youth mirrors shifts in the imagining of time in a social and historical context. For example, as Nancy Lesko (2001) has shown, early modern discourses of youth and adolescence constructed the development of children and young people as rehearsals of evolutionary history and aligned youth with colonial depictions of racialised Others as developmentally delayed. Contemporary developmental psychology constructs adolescence as a period of linear development marked by physical and cognitive milestones (such as the capacity for rational self-governance) that themselves reflect normative assumptions about the nature of contemporary youth and adulthood. Finally, the concept of youth ‘transitions’—perhaps the dominant concept currently shaping social policy interventions into youth—understands youth in terms of the timing of movements into work, family formation, and other normative signifiers of adulthood (Wyn & White, 1997). The development of youth is then assessed in terms of normative milestones—either of individual development or social transition—and compared to a developmental end point that is idealised by those who put these frameworks to work in understanding and shaping the world.

As youth has become intertwined with notions of developmental time, young people have become critical targets for institutional interventions into the social, economic and political fabric of a changing world—changes that are themselves conceived in terms of development. ‘Developing’ countries are encouraged to develop their young people in order that they may support their home country’s position in a competitive global economy. A global institutional framework of citizenship education aligns the social and cognitive development of young people with the political sensibilities suited towards navigating a post-national political landscape. This post-national citizenship discourse encourages young people to relinquish ties to particular localities, and understands this as the logical end point of healthy political development. In both instances, successful development is understood as the accumulation of capitals and dispositions that are suited to the needs of the contemporary economy, and to the national and supra-national institutions that act within this global scene. It is in this way that young people become critical to the governmentality of globalisation. Moreover, it is in this way that a developmental temporality is installed as a way of governing the changing and increasingly complex spaces of the contemporary world (Farrugia, 2018).

This book is published amidst global social changes that are unravelling this taken for granted temporality, and that are raising the problem of place in youth studies. Comaroff and Comaroff (2012) have suggested that youth labour markets in the global North increasingly resemble those to be found in ‘developing’ countries, dissolving any clear developmental distinction between the two and installing elevated levels of youth unemployment as a structural feature of contemporary global capitalism. Amidst incitements to ‘global citizenship’, young people’s day to day practices of citizenship are positioned at the forefront of what Anita Harris (2014) has described as conviviality amidst difference, or new strategies for negotiating belonging within the complex social relations of the hyper-diverse local. Finally, youth cultures encompass unpredictable trans-local flows of cultural symbols that are articulated in unique local practices that produce strong attachments to the specificity of a local scene or place (Condry, 2006). Place—and the mutable spatiality of the contemporary global scene—is being reasserted both in young people’s practices, posing a challenge to the intellectual frameworks currently deployed to understand their lives.

Identities, Youth and Belonging: International Perspectives is therefore an important and timely resource for those aiming to understand the meaning of youth in a changing world, and to challenge the intellectual orthodoxies currently shaping youth studies. Through a focus on practices of belonging, this book shows how young people are producing and reproducing the places that make up the daily fabric of their lives. In this, the editors and authors demonstrate the critical political significance that place occupies for young people and for theoretical development in this field of research. The relationship between belonging and place provides a new insight into how youth identities are imbricated within educational institutions, religious communities, virtual networks, music scenes, and trans-national mobilities including experiences of migration and displacement. Through a focus on place and belonging, the multiple contributions of this volume amount suggest new, interdisciplinary frameworks for understanding youth. In this way, this book suggests a new epistemology of youth that visible forms of situated relational practice that have remained marginal to theoretical development in the field thus far. The book therefore offers a new insight into the creation of youth subjectivities and to the position of young people within the contemporary politics of place.

University of Newcastle
Callaghan, NSW, Australia

David Farrugia

References

- Comaroff, J., & Comaroff, J. (2012). Theory from the South: Or, how Euro-America is evolving toward Africa. Milton Park and New York: Routledge.
- Condry, I. (2006). Hip-Hop Japan: Rap and the paths of cultural globalization. Durham and London: Duke University Press.
- Farrugia, D. (2018). Spaces of youth: Work, citizenship and culture in a global context. Abington and New York: Routledge.
- Harris, A. (2014). Young people and everyday multiculturalism. New York: Routledge.
- Lesko, N. (2001). Act your age! A cultural construction of adolescence. New York and London: Routledge Falmer.
- Wyn, J., & White, R. (1997). Rethinking youth. St Leonards: Allen and Unwin.

Contents

- 1 Youth Negotiating Belonging in a Global World 1
Sadia Habib and Michael R. M. Ward
- 2 Growing Up in ‘The Ends’: Identity, Place and Belonging in an Urban East London Neighbourhood 17
Joy White
- 3 Young Indonesian Musicians, Upward Career Mobility and Feeling at Home 35
Oki Rahadiano Sutopo
- 4 Religion and (Re)negotiation of Belonging among Zimbabwean Migrant Youths in South Africa 51
Charles Dube
- 5 Being Kurdish at a Turkish University Campus: A Spatial Approach to Belonging 69
Baris Isci Pembeci

6	Transit and Transition: Student Identity and the Contested Landscape of Higher Education	87
	Vicki Trowler
7	Using Bourdieu to Understand the Pathways to Belonging That Are Forged by Young Students of Refugee Experience in an Australian Mainstream School	105
	Fiona Picton and Grant Banfield
8	Virtual Communities as Safe Spaces Created by Young Feminists: Identity, Mobility and Sense of Belonging	123
	Raquel Miño-Puigcercós, Pablo Rivera-Vargas, and Cristóbal Cobo Romani
9	Exploring the Potential for Community Where Diverse Individuals Belong	141
	Kate J. Cassidy
10	(Un)Belonging in Higher Education: Negotiating Working-Class Masculinities Within and Beyond the University Campus	159
	Michael R. M. Ward
11	Portraits of Place: Critical Pedagogy in the Classroom	177
	Sadia Habib
12	Conclusion: Young People Negotiating Belonging in Changing Times	195
	Sadia Habib and Michael R. M. Ward
	Index	213

Notes on Contributors

Grant Banfield works as a Lecturer in Education at Flinders University (Australia). He writes and researches in the area of educational sociology and political economy. His particular intellectual interests lie in the application of Bhaskarian critical realism to social science research and education for human emancipation.

Kate J. Cassidy is a practitioner and researcher with an interest in human behaviour and development in social contexts. Her research includes the influence of globalization on education and the workplace; the meaning of 'belonging' in various social contexts; holistic education practices; and generic skills development.

Cristóbal Cobo Romani holds a PhD in Communication Sciences from the Universitat Autònoma de Barcelona (Spain). He is the Director of the Center for Research at the Ceibal Foundation in Uruguay. He is an Associate Researcher at the Oxford Internet Institute, University of Oxford (UK).

Charles Dube has a PhD in Social Anthropology from the University of Stellenbosch (South Africa). He has research interests in diverse areas including migration and Pentecostalism, food security and urban security. Charles has published on migration and its impact on masculinities and decision-making in Zimbabwe and South Africa.

Sadia Habib is a freelance researcher who completed her BA (Hons) English and Postgraduate Certificate in Education (PGCE) at University of Leicester

(UK), and her MA in Education and PhD in Education at Goldsmiths, University of London (UK). She has a decade of teaching experience in UK schools and colleges. Her research focuses on young people's identities and belongings, critical multiculturalism, critical pedagogy and anti-racist education. She is the author of Learning and Teaching British Values: Policies and Perspectives on British Identities (Palgrave Macmillan, 2017).

Baris Isci Pembeci holds a PhD in Cultural Anthropology from Washington University in St. Louis (USA) and works as an Assistant Professor at Mugla University (Turkey). Baris' current research interests include group boundaries, ethno-racial dynamics in Central Asia and Turkey, cultural geography, stigmatization and discrimination, and social resilience.

Raquel Miño-Puigcercós holds a PhD in Education and Society from the University of Barcelona (Spain), where she is a Teaching Associate in the Department of Didactics and Educational Organization.

Fiona Picton teaches in the School of Education at Flinders University (Australia). Fiona has more than twenty years of experience teaching in Australian public schools. Her research interests are in social justice issues in education with a focus on equity, inclusion, identity, belonging and student wellbeing.

Pablo Rivera-Vargas has a PhD in Education and Society from the University of Barcelona (Spain), where he is a teacher and researcher in the Department of Teaching and Educational Organization. Pablo's research interests include digital culture, decolonial research, and youth cultures.

Oki Rahadianto Sutopo is a lecturer in the Department of Sociology and an executive director at the Youth Studies Centre (YouSure), Faculty of Social and Political Sciences, Universitas Gadjah Mada (Indonesia). His recent work focuses on youth studies, cultural sociology and sociology of knowledge.

Vicki Trowler is a freelance researcher with more than twenty years of experience working in Higher Education in South Africa and the UK. Vicki holds a PhD from the University of Edinburgh (UK). Her current research interests include higher education and social justice, student engagement, and social media.

Michael R. M. Ward is a Lecturer in Social Sciences at Swansea University (UK). His work centres on the performance of working-class masculinities within and beyond educational institutions and he is the author of the award winning 2015 book From Labouring to Learning, Working-class Masculinities, Education and De-industrialization (Palgrave Macmillan).

Joy White is a Visiting Lecturer at the University of Roehampton (UK). In 2015–16, she held the Independent Scholar Fellow award from the Independent Social Research Foundation (ISRF). She is the author of Urban Music and Entrepreneurship: Beats, Rhymes and Young People's Enterprise (Routledge, 2017). Joy's research interests include social mobility, urban marginality, youth violence, mental health/wellbeing and the performance geographies of black music.