The Palgrave Critical Criminological Perspectives book series aims to showcase the importance of critical criminological thinking when examining problems of crime, social harm and criminal and social justice. Critical perspectives have been instrumental in creating new research agendas and areas of criminological interest. By challenging state defined concepts of crime and rejecting positive analyses of criminality, critical criminological approaches continually push the boundaries and scope of criminology, creating new areas of focus and developing new ways of thinking about, and responding to, issues of social concern at local, national and global levels. Recent years have witnessed a flourishing of critical criminological narratives and this series seeks to capture the original and innovative ways that these discourses are engaging with contemporary issues of crime and justice.

Notes on Contributors

Alana Barton is Reader in Criminology at Edge Hill University. Her research interests and publications focus around prisons and ‘prison tourism’, austerity and ‘war on the poor’, the concept of the criminological imagination, and the study of ‘agnosis’. She is the author of Fragile Moralities and Dangerous Sexualities (2005) and co-editor of Expanding the Criminological Imagination (2007). Her work has been published in a range of journals including the Howard Journal, British Journal of Community Justice and Crime, Media, Culture. She is involved with the Learning Together project, which is concerned with establishing educational pathways between prisons and universities.

Victoria Canning is Lecturer and Economic and Social Research Council (ESRC) ‘Future Research Leader’ Fellow in Social Policy and Criminology at The Open University, UK. She is co-ordinator of the ‘Prisons, Punishment and Detention’ working group, trustee at Statewatch and author of ‘Gendered Harm and Structural Violence in the British Asylum System’ (2017). She works closely with Migrant Artists Mutual Aid, with whom she co-edited ‘Strategies for Survival, Recipes for Resistance’ (2017) and partners with the Danish Institute Against Torture on a project titled ‘Gendered Experiences of Social Harm in Asylum: Exploring State Responses to Persecuted Women in Britain, Denmark and Sweden’.

Howard Davis is Senior Lecturer in Criminology at Edge Hill University. He had a previous career as a social worker, working in the fields of child protection, trauma and bereavement. His research and teaching interests include state-corporate harm, criminological and victimological aspects of acute and chronic disasters, media and state legitimisation of ‘austerity’ and the effects of neoliberalism on higher education. His work has been published in a range of journals including the British Journal of Social Work, Disasters and the British Journal of Criminology.

Alex Dymock is Lecturer in Criminology and Law at Royal Holloway, University of London, UK. Her interest in the politics of representation and consumption of images stems from her campaigning work around the legal regulation of pornography. She worked for many years with the pressure group, Backlash, and has given talks about pornography to audiences at the British Film Institute (BFI), Curzon Cinema Soho and Southwark Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual and Transgender (LGBT) network, as well as submitted written evidence to the Home Affairs Select Committee.

Anthony Keating is Programme Leader for Edge Hill University’s BSc (Hons) Psychosocial Analysis of Offending Behaviour. He completed his PhD at Dublin City University in 2002, exploring the role of identity, culture and communication in the failure to protect vulnerable children in post-independence Ireland. Latterly, as a Government of Ireland post-doctoral research fellow, he researched sexual crime in twentieth-century Ireland, with a particular focus on the censorship, formal and informal, that sought to deny or obfuscate its causation, nature and extent.

Mark McGovern is Professor of Sociology at Edge Hill University, UK. His work focuses on the study of political violence, conflict and post-conflict transition, particularly in Northern Ireland, and he has been involved for many years in research with community groups and local and international NGOs and lawyers dealing with post-conflict human rights, truth and justice issues. His research investigates the nature and extent of British state collusion with loyalists during the conflict in Northern Ireland and a book on this subject is forthcoming. He is the co-author of Ardayne: The Untold Truth (Beyond the Pale: 2002) and has published in a wide range of international journals including Sociology, Law and Society, Critical Studies on Terrorism, Race and Class, Terrorism and Political Violence and State Crime.

Riki Mihaere (Ngāti Kahungunu) engaged ‘A kaupapa Māori analysis of the use of Māori cultural identity in the prison system’ for his PhD thesis at Victoria University of Wellington (VUW). From 2016–2017, he was a post-doctoral fellow on a Rutherford Discovery Fellowship project at the Institute of Criminology, VUW.

David Scott works at The Open University, UK. He was the coordinator of the European Group for the Study of Deviance and Social Control from 2009–2012 and is a former editor of the Howard Journal of Crime and Justice and the co-founding editor of the journal Justice, Power and Resistance. He is one of the main organisers of the campaign against the building of six new mega prisons in England and Wales and co-organiser of the International Conference on Penal Abolition (ICOPA) in London in June 2018. Recent book titles include Controversial Issues in Prisons (2010); Prisons and Punishment (2014); Emancipatory Politics and Praxis (2016); Against Imprisonment (2018).

Elizabeth Stanley is Reader and Rutherford Discovery Fellow at the Institute of Criminology, Victoria University of Wellington. Her research focuses on state crimes, human rights, detention and social justice. Her publications include ‘Torture, Truth and Justice’, ‘State Crime and Resistance’ (with Jude McCulloch), and ‘The Road to Hell: State Violence against Children in Post War NZ’.

Steve Tombs is Professor of Criminology at The Open University, UK. He has a long-standing interest in the incidence, nature and regulation of corporate and state crime and harm and has published widely on these matters. His most recent book is Social Protection After the Crisis: Regulation Without Enforcement (2016). He has long worked with the Hazards movement and the Institute of Employment Rights in the UK and is a trustee and board member of Inquest.

Reece Walters is a professor in the School of Justice and director of the Crime and Justice Research Centre at Queensland University of Technology. He has been officially appointed an adviser to the Government of New Zealand and the UK and sat on advisory committees examining a range of issues including gun control, broadcasting regulation and crime prevention. His current research focuses on crimes and harms against the ‘essentials of life’, notably the ways in which states and corporations manipulate and exploit food, water and air for power and profit. He has published several books in this area including Eco Crime and Genetically Modified Food (2011), Emerging issues in Green Criminology (2013) with Tanya Wyatt and Diane Solomon, and Water, Crime and Security in the Twenty-First Century: Too Dirty, Too Little, Too Much (2017) with Avi Brisman, Nigel South and Bill McClanahan.

Holly White is Lecturer in Sociology and Criminology at the University of Chester. Her research interests and publications centre around narratives of poverty, particularly challenging inaccurate and harmful discourses. She was an adviser and social policy co-ordinator for Citizens Advice, supporting campaigns on issues including the 'bedroom tax'. She holds voluntary positions in West Cheshire's Food Bank and is the co-founder and co-ordinator of the charity's Research and Advisory Committee. She holds a position on the editorial collective for the European Group for Deviance and Social Control and, in 2017, co-edited the group's first collection of postgraduate student and early career researchers' essays titled Emerging Voices.
