Acknowledgments

Thank you to the authors. They have taken the time to contribute thoughtful and insightful work illustrating the diversity of thinking in behavioral inhibition research. Thank you also to the hundreds of families who have dedicated countless hours to the work and science reflected in this volume.

About the Editors

Koraly Pérez-Edgar, Ph.D. is the McCourtney Professor of Child Studies and a Professor of Psychology at the Pennsylvania State University. She received her A.B. from Dartmouth College and Ph.D. from Harvard University. Dr. Pérez-Edgar's research focuses on the relations between temperament and psychopathology. In particular, she examines how individual differences in attention can work to ameliorate or exacerbate risks associated with early temperament traits. Dr. Pérez-Edgar is a fellow of the Association for Psychological Science.

Nathan A. Fox, Ph.D. is a Distinguished University Professor of Human Development at the University of Maryland. He received his B.A. from Williams College and Ph.D. from Harvard University. Dr. Fox is a world-recognized leader in the study of early behavioral inhibition, the impact of early life events on development, and the biological underpinning of development. He is a fellow of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, the Association for Psychological Science, and the American Academy of Arts and Sciences.
