

PART ONE

Theories, mechanisms and examples

In one way this is encouraging, for when similar conclusions are reached by different minds using diverse organisms and points of view, the resultant theories must be more convincing, but in another way this is discouraging, for one's confidence is shattered in being neither first nor original.

Eugene K. Balon (1983)
in Epigenetic mechanisms: reflections on evolutionary processes