

Duty and Inclination
The Fundamentals of Morality Discussed and
Redefined with Special Regard to Kant and Schiller

PHAENOMENOLOGICA
COLLECTION FONDÉE PAR H.L. VAN BREDA ET PUBLIÉE
SOUS LE PATRONAGE DES CENTRES D'ARCHIVES-HUSSERL

93

HANS REINER

Duty and Inclination
The Fundamentals of Morality Discussed and
Redefined with Special Regard to Kant and Schiller

Comité de rédaction de la collection:
Président: S. IJsseling (Leuven)
Membres: L. Landgrebe (Köln),
W. Marx (Freiburg i.Br.), J.N. Mohanty (Oklahoma),
P. Ricoeur (Paris), E. Ströker (Köln),
J. Taminiaux (Louvain-La-Neuve),
Secrétaire: J. Taminiaux

HANS REINER

Duty and Inclination
The Fundamentals of Morality
Discussed and Redefined with Special Regard to Kant and Schiller

1983 MARTINUS NIJHOFF PUBLISHERS
a member of the KLUWER ACADEMIC PUBLISHERS GROUP
THE HAGUE / BOSTON / LANCASTER

Distributors

for the United States and Canada: Kluwer Boston, Inc., 190 Old Derby Street, Hingham, MA 02043, USA

for all other countries: Kluwer Academic Publishers Group, Distribution Center, P.O.Box 322, 3300 AH Dordrecht, The Netherlands

Library of Congress Cataloging in Publication Data

Reiner, Hans, 1896-
Duty and inclination.

(Phaenomenologica ; 93)

Translation of: Die Grundlagen der Sittlichkeit.

1. Ethics. 2. Kant, Immanuel, 1724-1804--Ethics.

3. Schiller, Friedrich, 1759-1805--Religion and ethics.

I. Title. II. Series.

BJ1114.R4213 1983 170 83-1029

ISBN-13: 978-94-009-6832-5

e-ISBN-13: 978-94-009-6830-1

DOI: 10.1007/978-94-009-6830-1

Book information

A Translation of the first four chapters of Die Grundlagen der Sittlichkeit. Second revised edition of "Pflicht und Neigung", 1974, Verlag Anton Hain, Meisenheim am Glan. Translated by Mark Santos.

Copyright

© 1983 by Martinus Nijhoff Publishers, The Hague.

Softcover reprint of the hardcover 1st edition 1983

All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced, stored in a retrieval system, or transmitted in any form or by any means, mechanical, photocopying, recording, or otherwise, without the prior written permission of the publishers, Martinus Nijhoff Publishers, P.O. Box 566, 2501 CN The Hague, The Netherlands.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Preface by William K. Frankena	IX
Authors Preface	XIII
I. Duty and Inclination
§ 1 Introduction	1
A ETHICO-HISTORICAL AND CRITICAL PART
CHAPTER 1. KANT'S SYSTEMS OF ETHICS IN ITS RELATION TO SCHILLER'S ETHICAL VIEWS
§ 2 Some Main Features of Kant's Ethics	15
§ 3 The Part Feeling Plays in Morality	23
§ 4 Schiller's Views on Kant's Ethics	29
§ 5 Kant's Answer to Schiller	35
§ 6 Were Kant and Schiller Really of One Mind?	41
§ 7 The Question Whether Kant or Schiller was Right	49
CHAPTER 2: A CRITIQUE OF THE GROUNDWORK OF KANT'S ETHICS
§ 8 A Preliminary Discussion of the Relevance of Questions about Method to a Critique of a Philosophical System	51
§ 9 The Method of Kant's Ethics and the Extreme Limit He Sets on Our Ethics Insight	54
§ 10 A Critique of the Method of Kant's Ethics	62
§ 11 Some Main Points of a Critique of Kant's System of Ethics
1. The Moral Good as the Good in Itself	71

VI

§ 12 Some Main Points of a Critique of Kant's System of Ethics 2. The Moral Law and Its Formula	75
§ 13 Some Main Points of a Critique of Kant's System of Ethics 3. Morality and Freedom	81

B SYSTEMATIC PART

CHAPTER 3: THE METHOD REQUIRED IN ETHICS

§ 14 The Part that Experience and Induction Play in the Method of Ethics	88
§ 15 The Method and Task of Ethics	92
§ 16 Ethics' Method Applied	99

CHAPTER 4: THE ORIGINS OF THE MORAL OUGHT AND ITS RELATIONS TO INCLINATION AND WILLING

§ 17 The Phenomena of Consciousness of the Moral Ought	112
§ 18 The Place of Conscience in the Human Personality and in Human Freedom	121
§ 19 The Nature and Concept of Willing. Willing as a Judgement by the Will and the Ought-to-Be	125
§ 20 Judgements by the Will, Striving and Inclination. The Objectivity of the Ought-to-Be and the Concept of Value	131
§ 21 Critical Excursus: The Relations of Heidegger and Thomism to the Concept and Datum of Value	146
§ 22 The Origin of the Ought-to-Do (Ought-to-Conduct-Oneself- so) from the Objective Ought-to-Be. A Sense of Responsibili- ty and a Sense of Honor as the Corresponding Subjective Sources	167
§ 23 The Moral Ought in Its Primary, Axionomic (Not Fully Autonomous) Form	173
§ 24 The Secondary Non-Autonomous Moral Ought, Which Is Grounded on a Relation to an Authority	184
§ 25 On the Question Whether There are Non-Strict Moral Demands and a Sphere of the Morally Permissible	191
§ 26 Corroborations of the Objectivity of Conscience. The Autonomization of the Axionomic Moral Ought	199
§ 27 Structures and Effects Intrinsic to the Autonomous Moral Ought	211
§ 28 The Relation of a Sense of Honor to an Autonomized Consciousness of the Ought	219
§ 29 Duty and Inclination: Moral Obligation and Volition	222

§ 30	The Natures of the Moral Good and Evil, Especially in Their Relation to the Moral Ought	230
§ 31	The Morality of Conduct (Sittlichkeit des Verhaltens) and the Morality of Being (Sittlichkeit des Seins)	244
§ 32	The First Fundamentals of Morality	246
II.	On the Adaption of the Phenomenological Method to, and Its Refinement as a Method of, Ethics. (Zeitschrift für Philosophische Forschung 29 (1975), pp. 108 – 117.)	251
III.	Is Value Ethics Out of Date? (Zeitschrift für Philosophische Forschung 30 (1976), pp. 93 – 98.)	263
IV.	The Golden Rule and Natural Law. (Studia Leibnitiana 8 (1977), pp. 231 – 254.)	271
V.	Good and Value, The Philosophical Relevance of the Concept of Value	295
	Name index	299
	Subject index	303

PREFACE BY PROFESSOR WILLIAM K. FRANKENA

Many British and American works in moral philosophy have been translated into German recently. Now, if I were asked to select one German moral philosopher of the last fifty years for translation into English, it would be Hans Reiner. His writings in ethics, both systematic and historical, strike me as the clearest, soundest, most careful, and most interesting of the German works written by people who were not influenced by English-speaking (or Austrian) analytical philosophy. For a long time he was almost the only German philosopher to take ethics or moral philosophy seriously as a relatively distinct branch of philosophy, in opposition to Heidegger and the existentialists. As a result, his work was undeservedly neglected; he was, actually, I would say, putting forward a new ethical system of roughly the same importance as that of W.D. Ross. I am therefore happy to promote the translation of some of Reiner's work and to help in getting it a hearing in the English-speaking world.

Reiner's systematic thinking in ethics belongs to the phenomenological movement of Husserl, Scheler, Hartmann, and von Hildebrand. While most specifically influenced by von Hildebrand, it represents a novel kind of phenomenological ethics. It is a "Wertethik" still but one of a different sort, with more affinity with the ethics of deontologists like Ross. It is also more analytical in the English-speaking sense, although the analysis continues to take a relatively phenomenological form. It also continues the more or less intuitionistic or non-naturalistic line of thought of Reiner's predecessors, though without the Platonism of some of them, and in a form that may be more acceptable than those of Moore, Prichard, Ross, or even Ewing.

Another characteristic of Reiner's work is his concern with the history of ethics. He has a very learned and perceptive grasp of ethics on the Continent of Europe, ancient, medieval, and modern, and what he says about it is accurate, acute, and rewarding. Some of his writings are primarily historical, though even these tend to have a critical and constructive orientation, and even his more systematic works usually involve some reference to and discussion of classical writers. Especially interesting as a historical and critical review of previous ethical systems is Die philosophische Ethik: ihre Fragen und Lehren in Geschichte und Gegenwart (1964).

It would be remiss of me if I did not mention Reiner's little book Die Ehre: Kritische Sichtung einer abendländischen Lebens- und Sittlichkeitsform (1956). In it he gives us one of the best discussions of honor, at once critical and sympathetic, that we have had from any philosopher. Also well worth reading is another small work, Der Sinn unseres Daseins (1964).

It happens that Reiner has recently written an acute and helpful paper on the problems of translating the English terms "right" and "wrong" into German. This paper includes a four-paragraph summary of his ethical system, and I shall conclude by translating it.

"Morality rests on the givenness of values and disvalues and exists in our freedom and power to work for or against their realisation through what we do or not do. They are experienced as what is pleasing (erfreulich) or displeasing (unerfreulich) about actual or represented beings, and are of two kinds. The first are objects of a desire for their possession, use, or some similar real relation to them in which they come to benefit us and so, in a wide sense, to fulfill a need. These are need-related values, and include whatever is agreeable, and also esteem and glory, as well as necessities like food and drink. In the case of values of the second sort, their existence in actuality is as such experienced as pleasing (and that of disvalues as displeasing), regardless of where or by whom they are actualized. Such values are absolute, being experienced as having value in themselves. Of this sort are the values of a moral character of justice, and of life itself.

Need-related values may be realized either as satisfying one's own needs or as satisfying those of others. The latter are objectively significant, as are absolute values and need-related values that are necessary for one's own life. Need-related values that fulfill needs of one's own but are not necessary to one's life are merely subjectively significant. Objectively significant values present themselves to us as something that ought to be for its own sake; subjectively significant values present themselves simply as satisfying our desires or our need for recognition. Hence arises the consciousness that we ought to have a regard for the status of objectively significant values, and, if necessary, to set ourselves to actualize or maintain them. About subjectively significant values, on the other hand, we are conscious that we ought to give them up when their pursuit conflicts with the demands of objectively significant values. One's act is morally good if one fulfills such demands; if one acts counter to them it is evil (böse). The decision here is a matter of the will; intelligence and experience are not needed.

Often, however, we must choose between two or more objectively significant values. In such cases the question which one to prefer is not a question of what is good or evil but of what is morally right (sittlich richtig). In 'Pflicht und Neigung' eleven principles for dealing with such cases are formulated. Here the decision is primarily a matter of knowledge, though it cannot always be made with certainty. Everyone just does what appears as morally right (what is subjectively morally right) as long as no subjectively significant values play a role. To determine what is objectively morally right, however, often requires prudence and experience, or even scientific knowledge. Because of variations in historical and personal situations such determinations are valid only with corresponding qualifications.

Often in choices between two or more objectively significant values, one finds a merely subjectively significant value tied to one of them. Then one's decision in favor of that objectively significant value is morally good only if one chooses it for its own sake; the decision is without moral worth if one chooses the object only because of the subjectively significant value involved. If one chooses the lesser of two objectively significant values because of some merely subjectively significant value associated with it, then one's choice is both morally wrong (sittlich falsch) and evil (böse)".

1. "Was heisst und wie übersetzt man 'right' und 'wrong' als Grundbegriffe der Moral ins Deutsche?", Archiv für Rechts- und Sozialphilosophie, Bd. LXIV/2 (1978), 243 – 268. The summary occurs on pp. 258 – 260. There is a translation of a longer essay in which Reiner states his position in J.J. Kockelman's Contemporary European Ethics. Anchor Books. 1972, pp. 158 – 181.

AUTHOR'S PREFACE

The preceding Preface, which Professor William Frankena had the great kindness to write as an introduction for the readers of the present English translation of my major work, still requires several supplementary comments on my part. Professor Frankena rightly considered it to be an advantage to introduce the English-speaking world to my moral philosophy through its presentation in this book. As an introduction to my moral philosophy, Professor Frankena provided a concise formulation of the fundamental ideas of my ethics by quoting from an article I had just recently published. Several points worth mentioning remain.

Firstly, it is necessary to distinguish the two editions of the text here translated. The first edition was published in 1951 by Anton Hain in Meisenheim am Glan, under the title Pflicht und Neigung (Duty and Inclination), with the subtitle Die Grundlagen der Sittlichkeit, erörtert und neu bestimmt mit besonderem Bezug auf Kant und Schiller (The Fundamentals of Morality, Discussed and Redefined with Special Regard to Kant and Schiller). In 1974, a revised and enlarged second edition was published by the same publisher and was entitled Die Grundlagen der Sittlichkeit (The Fundamentals of Morality). Of this second edition, the first four chapters have been translated in the present volume, along with four more recent essays.

Concerning the content of the four chapters presented in this translation, a further point should be stated. My system of "Wertethik" (value ethics) has been developed by me, as Professor Frankena observed, not only with reference to Scheler, N. Hartmann and D. von Hildebrand, on a purely theoretical and systematical method, but also in a dialogue with Kant. This dialogue had been elicited and was justified in view of the eminent role of Kant's moral philosophy in Germany since the publication of his fundamental work in ethics and also in view of their interpretation, which is still controversial, particularly in phenomenological philosophy. In the English-speaking world as well, where Kantian ethics has had less influence and has been given less consideration, this dialogue might be of interest and could offer new insights.

XIV

Furthermore, I would like to call the reader's attention to three of the smaller essays presented in this volume. In these I clarify and defend my position within the school of "Wertethik". The essays are: (a) "Die Ausbildung und Fortbildung der phänomenologischen Methode der Ethik" (On the Adaption of the Phenomenological Method to, and Its Refinement as a Method of, Ethics); published in Zeitschrift für philosophische Forschung, 29 (1975), pp. 108 – 117; (b) "Wertethik nicht mehr aktuell?" (Is Value Ethics Out of Date?), in Zeitschrift für philosophische Forschung, 30 (1976), pp. 93 – 98; (c) "Die Goldene Regel und das Naturrecht" (The Golden Rule and Natural Law) in Studia Leibnitiana, 8 (1977), pp. 231 – 254.

Finally the present volume ends with the essay "Good and Value. The Philosophical Relevance of the Concept of Value", which, in my view, comprises a completely new foundation of ethics as Wertethik with an emphasis on its relevance to the history of language.

I would like to thank Mr. Mark Santos, who has been working on this project for several years in continuous discussion with me, for his devoted labor.