These are symptoms that are generally characterized by any combination of the following factors, as being:

1. deeply engraved psychotic, or psychotic-like, and that have usurped the entire personality;
2. chronically entrenched and/or somatized;
3. a function of an organic brain syndrome, genetic anomaly, or a particularly thin ego;
4. a function of a catastrophic anger or rage implosion based upon an experience of profound helplessness;
5. no longer an alien facet of the psyche but rather as having usurped the psyche.

With respect to the nature of the anger or rage implosion, such inaccessible symptoms are so designated because the repressed anger:

1. is of the severest magnitude so as to have threatened almost all, or literally, all aspects of the psyche;
2. is of such intensity that the psyche anticipates its imminent demise;
3. is of such sufficient depth that the psyche may anticipate a foreboding of being imminently cleaved;
4. is so chronic that the psyche is likely to have already succumbed to the symptom.