Blackness in the Andes

To Nadège Marguerite,

Simone Esmeralda, Bassirou Jean, and Kazady Yusuf.
Contents

List of Figures & Tables ix
Acknowledgments xi

Introduction 1

Chapter 1 The Afro-Esmeraldian Décimas—Ecuador: Creolization/Malleability in the Time of Interculturalismo and Neo-Essentialism 9

Chapter 2 Presence of Blackness and Representations of Jews in the Afro-Esmeraldian Celebrations of Semana Santa 37

Chapter 3 From Panacea for Harmonious Race Relations to Ideological Tool for Oppression and National Identity Imagination: Reflections from the Andes on Mestizaje through Time and Space 65

Chapter 4 Afrodescendants, the Multicultural Turn and the “New” Latin American Constitutions and Other Special Legislations: Particularities of the Andean Region by Jean Muteba Rahier and Mamyrah Dougé Prosper 89

Chapter 5 A Glimpse at Afro-Ecuadorian Politics, Influences on and Participation in Constitutional Processes, and State Corporatism 105

Chapter 6 Blackness, the Racial-Spatial Order at Work, and Beauty Contest Politics: Señoras, Mujeres, Blanqueamiento, and the Negra Permitida 121

Chapter 7 Stereotypes of Hypersexuality and the Embodiment of Blackness: Some Narratives of Female Sexuality in Quito, Ecuador 147
Chapter 8  Fútbol and the (Tri-)Color of the Ecuadorian Nation: Ideological and Visual (Dis-)Continuities of Black Otherness from Monocultural Mestizaje to Multiculturalism 175

Appendix 199

Notes 207

Cited References 219

Index 237
List of Figures & Tables

Map 1.1. The two Afro-Ecuadorian communities that took shape during the colonial period: The Esmeraldas Province and the Chota-Mira Valley. (Jean Muteba Rahier) 11

Map 2.1. The three regions of Ecuador—the Coast, the Sierra or Andes, and the Oriente—and the northern region of Esmeraldas Province around the Santiago River basin. (Maps by Paul Pugliese, General Cartography, Inc.) 39

Table 5.1. National Census of 2010 (Censo de Población y Vivienda [CPV] 2010; Instituto Nacional de Estadística y Censos [INEC]). (See http://www.inec.gob.ec/estadisticas/) 106
ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

As I explain in the introduction to this book, the work published here was conducted over many years, from the late 1980s through 2013. This means that I am accountable for help and advice received along the way to a long list of people.

I must begin by thanking Juan García Salazar for his generous welcoming embrace in 1984, when we first met before he introduced me to the Ecuadorian province of Esmeraldas and to the Grupo Afroecuatoriano, which was then publishing the Cuadernos Afroecuatorianos.

In Ecuador, I am most thankful to the inhabitants of the villages and towns of the northern region of Esmeraldas Province, who allowed me among them repeatedly between the mid-1980s and 2010. Among these villages and towns are La Tola, Limones, Borbón, San Lorenzo, El Cuerval, La Tolita Pampa de Oro, Selva Alegre, Playa de Oro, Olmedo, Santo Domingo de Ónzole, Colón, and San Francisco de Ónzole. I am forever grateful to Edgardo Prado, his wife, Pany, and their children, for their generous solidarity and gift of affectionate family ambiance when I was residing in Ecuador (Esmeraldas and Quito). My gratitude also goes to those who have welcomed me in the villages of the Chota-Mira Valley: El Chota, Juncal, Piquiucho, and Carpuela. The various research initiatives I pursued over the years would not have been possible without the support of Rocío Rueda Novoa, Oscar Chalá, José Chalá, Manuel Mancheno, Iván Saltos, Hernán Ibarra, Carlos de la Torre, Jhon Antón, Jacqueline Pavón Espinoza, Susana Cervantes, Catherine Walsh, Alexandra Ocles Padilla, my colleagues of the Departamento de Antropología de la Pontificia Universidad Católica del Ecuador (PUCE) in Quito from 1986 through 1991, Marc Franck, the ambassador of Belgium in the late 1980s and early 1990s, and his wife, Marie-Paule Bastin, their children, and so many others.

In Belgium and France, I must thank Carmen Bernand, Anne-Marie Losonczy, Odile Hoffman, Elisabeth Cunin, Christian Rinaudo, Luc de Heusch, and Philippe Descola for their advice and support.

In the United States, I am in debt to Norm Whitten and Percy Hintzen for old brotherly advice. I am also lucky to have benefited from fruitful intellectual exchanges with José Almeida, my colleagues and graduate students of the Department of Geography & Anthropology at Louisiana State University from 1992 to 1998, my colleagues and graduate students of the Department of Global & Sociocultural Studies and of the African & African Diaspora Studies since 1998, and with those who specifically read versions of the essays presented in this book and who provided useful feedback: Robin Sheriff, James Sweet, Felipe Smith, and many others. I must mention my fruitful collaboration with Mamyrah Prosper, a PhD student in the Department of Global & Sociocultural Studies in my university, for Chapter 4. Thanks to her archival research in our law library and elsewhere, we were able to get the data needed to write that chapter.

None of this work would have been possible without the support of my institution, Florida International University, and of its College of Arts & Sciences, School of International & Public Affairs, African & African Diaspora Studies Program, and Latin American and Caribbean Studies Center.

At Palgrave Macmillan, I must thank Editorial Director Farideh Koohi-Kamali and her assistant Sara Doskow for their tolerance of my numerous delays in sending in the final manuscript. I am also thankful to those who were involved in the peer review and copyediting processes.

Many thanks to Dennika Mays, my graduate student assistant, who helped me with the making of the book’s index.

Last but not least, I must acknowledge the loving and plentiful support of my life partner, Mariama Jaiteh, who has always been there with the necessary and serene encouragements in times of self-doubts.

The content of this book has benefited from the input of all who are named here. I remain solely responsible for its many shortcomings.