Palgrave Studies in Nineteenth-Century Writing and Culture is a new monograph series that aims to represent the most innovative research on literary works that were produced in the English-speaking world from the time of the Napoleonic Wars to the fin de siècle. Attentive to the historical continuities between ‘Romantic’ and ‘Victorian’, the series will feature studies that help scholarship to reassess the meaning of these terms during a century marked by diverse cultural, literary, and political movements. The main aim of the series is to look at the increasing influence of types of historicism on our understanding of literary forms and genres. It reflects the shift from critical theory to cultural history that has affected not only the period 1800–1900 but also every field within the discipline of English literature. All titles in the series seek to offer fresh critical perspectives and challenging readings of both canonical and non-canonical writings of this era.

More information about this series at http://www.springer.com/series/14607
Éadaoin Agnew

Imperial Women Writers in Victorian India

Representing Colonial Life, 1850–1910
ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Writing this book has been a journey in itself, one that started with my own travels to India, and I would like to thank my uncle, Pat Kelly, for helping me to make that first visit. Since then, India has been an enduring feature of my academic work, and there are many people, and several institutions, that have helped make that possible.

I would like to extend my gratitude to the staff at Queen’s University, Belfast, who helped me through my postgraduate studies and guided my formative work on nineteenth-century women travellers. I would especially like to thank Leon Litvack, Brian Caraher, Daniel Roberts, and Caroline Sumpter, who provided invaluable advice and expertise. It was also at Queen’s that I met fellow Victorianists Clare Clarke, Beth Rodgers, and Clare Gill. I thank them for their enduring friendship and for reading my work, listening to my papers, and sharing my passion for the overlooked figures of the Victorian period.

I am extremely grateful to the Department of Education and Learning for funding my PhD research, which consolidated my fascination for Victorian India. I would also like to thank the staff at the Public Record Office of Northern Ireland, Senate House Library, the National Archives, and the British Library who helped me to uncover the many fascinating women whose stories unfold throughout this book. And, I am extremely thankful to Lola Armstrong, the archivist at Clandeboye, for persistently indulging my enduring interest in Lady Dufferin.

I am utterly indebted to all my wonderful colleagues in the English Department of Kingston University, London. In particular, I offer sincere thanks to Jane Jordan, Sara Upstone, David Rogers, Patricia Phillippy, and Selene Scarsi, who read drafts, offered advice, and provided a warm and welcoming forum in which to discuss my work. I am also extremely grateful to Heidi James-Dunbar who, although no longer a colleague, has remained a friend and has been of great personal and professional support.

I would like to thank everyone at Palgrave, especially Ben Doyle, Eva Macmillan Hodgkin, Tomas René, and Joseph Bristow for all their hard work and for ultimately making this book possible by bringing it to publication.

And lastly, I thank my wonderful parents, my awesome siblings, and my incredible girlfriends; they have all been with me throughout this journey and never failed to believe that I could, or would, make it to the end of the road. They have simply been the very best of travel companions.
CONTENTS

1 Introduction: Imperial Women Writers in Victorian India 1

2 There’s No Place Like Home: Homes and Gardens in Victorian India 21

3 Good Housekeeping: Household Management and Domestic Organization 51

4 Family Ties: Imperial Women as Wives and Mothers 75

5 Ladies of Leisure: Pastimes, Daily Routines, and Philanthropic Duties 105

6 Hot Gossip: Sex and Sexuality in Victorian India 135

7 High Society: Hill Stations and Social Occasions 157

8 Epilogue 183

Bibliography 185

Index 195